PUBLISHER'S NOTE

Sense of Purpose

The purpose of the Canadian Donor's Guide remains the same as it always has been: to provide an authoritative annual directory to fundraising organizations in Canada. This year we celebrate the 32nd anniversary of the Guide's publication, the last 16 years under the ownership of our family business, Third Sector Publishing, based in Orillia, Ontario.

The Canadian Donor's Guide is published with the co-operation of the Canadian Association of Gift Planners (CAGP), the Canadian Bar Association, and Imagine Canada. We are grateful for the support of the above, as well as for the support of the numerous charities across Canada that pay for descriptive listings or display advertising. Together, they make it possible to publish the Canadian Donor's Guide, and to deliver over 17,000 copies of our publication to key decision makers and professional advisors in Canada's donor community.

Thank you.

We continue to feature an expanded Editorial Section. We also offer a Digital Edition of the Canadian Donor's Guide 2017-18. This is an exact replica of the print version of the Guide that you have in front of you. You view it on a computer screen by accessing it on the Internet via our website at www.donorsguide.ca.

We feature a strong lineup of contributors to this year's Editorial Section, as we have for a number of years.

Charity law in Canada is complex, largely because the regulation of charities has, over time, become entwined in this country's voluminous Income Tax Act. It is quite understandable to assume no elected Member of Parliament, or a provincial assembly, unless he or she was a tax expert before entering politics, grasps the complexities of the Income Tax Act; and therefore understands the constraints faced by registered charities and other non-profit organizations.

There continue to be well-founded pleas for reform of the legislative framework that hems in the work of charities and other non-profit entities in Canada. Why does Canada have to lag in this regard? Canadians do often require a nudge. One thought: something that is sometimes necessary in Canada to affect substantial change – a Royal Commission on the Reform of Charity Regulation in Canada.

Nevertheless, it is important to recognize that Canadian charities and their donors enjoy a more generous tax treatment system than what is found in many other first-world countries. Helping us once again to understand these tax benefits, and to unravel some of the mystery of our tax code as it relates to charitable giving, is Jim Parks, a senior lawyer in the field; his Summary of Tax Considerations begins on page 8.

If the complexity of Canada's Income Tax is not enough, on page 26 lawyer Adam Aptowitz outlines differences in tax brackets among provinces, and in some provinces the effect of surtaxes, and how these have an impact on charitable giving. Mark Blumberg warns charity employees and volunteers on page 16 that media are paying closer attention to the annual T3010 form that all charities have to file with the Canada Revenue Agency.

Unlike federal budgets of 2014, 2015 and 2016, the 2017 budget contained only a few small changes that will affect charities, the most notable ones being new rules added to the existing regime for gifts of ecologically sensitive property, explains Nicole K. D'Aoust on page 23. Longtime contributor to these pages, Malcolm Burrows, makes a strong argument on page 22 that, when it comes to estate planning, charities should retire the term: perpetuity.

Charity umbrella group Imagine Canada has a major new initiative underway: The Personal Philanthropy Project. Its goal is to inspire Canadians to increase their levels of charitable giving. Project Manager, Michèle Benoit, provides a summary starting on page 18. Readers may be interested to learn that Canadians earning $50,000 or less a year, who donate to charity, give a larger share of their income than those (who make charitable donations) earning between $50,000 and $900,000. The Widow's Mite is still with us.

Nevertheless, consulting firm KCI's latest Philanthropic Trends Quarterly says that total gifts reported by Canadian charities continue to increase, rising from about $15 billion in 2009 to $21.5 billion in 2014. But fewer donors are giving more, perhaps not surprising, as there is greater income inequality in this country.

It is always inspiring to read about individuals who benefit from or contribute in a meaningful way to charity. This edition we have three Profiles, provided by Make-A-Wish Canada, Canadian Red Cross, and Wildlife Rescue Association of BC. The common thread that runs through all three: meaningful contributions are the result of lives lived with a meaningful sense of purpose.

CHARITABLE DONATIONS

A Summary of Tax Considerations

OVERVIEW

Tax consequences are an important factor in structuring charitable gifts. Proper planning can increase the benefits to the donor, which are often a major incentive for charitable giving. A gift to a registered charity by an individual (including a trust) entitles the donor to a deduction in computing tax otherwise payable, whereas a gift by a corporation entitles it to a deduction in computing taxable income, as opposed to a tax credit. These rules are found in section 118.1 of the Income Tax Act (the “ITA”) for gifts by individuals and section 110.1 of the ITA for gifts by corporations.

2017 BUDGET PROPOSALS

The March 22, 2017 federal budget proposed only a few changes dealing with charitable donations and related matters, as follows:

1. Gifts of medicine by corporations will no longer qualify for preferential treatment.
2. Private foundations will no longer be able to receive ecological property in a tax-advantageous manner.
3. The rules for dispositions or changes of use of ecological property will be revised.
4. Special rules will apply for property in Quebec based on the civil law concept of “personal servitudes”.
5. For transactions or events occurring after March 22, 2017, the 50% tax on disposition or change of use of ecological property without the consent of the Minister of Environment and Climate Change Canada (“ECCC”) will apply, if the property is transferred for consideration and the recipient changes the use or disposes of that property without consent.

6. The first-time donor’s super credit will expire in 2017, as previously announced.
7. Measures announced in the 2016 budget dealing with information reporting requirements for dispositions of interests in life insurance policies will be reintroduced.

The budget also proposes amendments that are intended to strengthen Canada’s anti-money laundering and anti-terrorist financing regime by enabling the Department of National Defence and the Canadian Armed Forces to receive financial intelligence, dealing with intelligence related to beneficial owners of legal entities and making technical changes. Those proposals are not discussed in this article.

BASIC TAX RULES

Individuals

An individual donor can claim a credit against tax otherwise payable. This summary comments on charities that are registered by Canada Revenue Agency (“CRA”), RCAAAs, certain non-profit housing corporations, Canadian municipalities, the crown, the United Nations and certain foreign charities (including certain foreign universities) and other donees. Credits or deductions are available only for gifts to “qualified donees”, except as noted. The federal tax credit is calculated at the lowest personal tax rate of up to $200. For gifts exceeding $200, the credit is 33% of the amount of the gift. A comparable tax credit is available in calculating provincial taxes, with special rules in Quebec. An individual can claim credit for gifts of up to 75% of net income for the year. Unused credits can be carried forward for five years and used to offset tax in those years, subject to the 75% limit. The limit does not apply in the year of death or the previous year. The 75% limit is increased by 25% of taxable capital gains realized when making a gift of appreciated capital property, and 25% of recaptured capital cost allowance on a gift of depreciable property (to a maximum of 25% of the lesser of the capital cost or the fair market value of the property).

James M. Parks

This article does not discuss provincial tax implications, aside from pointing out that there are variations, based on different marginal rates in the provinces or territories. Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Yukon have increased their top marginal rates but have not increased the top donation tax credit rate. This can result in large donations not being fully eligible for the expected tax credits.

Corporations

A corporate donor can claim a deduction in computing taxable income and is subject to the same 75% limit as individuals. It can claim a deduction of up to 75% of its net income for the year plus 25% of a taxable capital gain and 25% of recaptured capital cost allowance on a gift of depreciable property (to the same maximum mentioned above).

TYPES OF GIFTS

The following are some basic features and tax consequences of certain types of gifts.

1. Gifts by Will

Gifts made by will are “testamentary” gifts. The donor (“testator”) states in a will that on death, property is to be given as a bequest or legacy to a named charity or a charity to be chosen by the executors. The gift can be cash or property, such as a work of art or shares. If the testator leaves too much discretion to the executors in choosing a charity or the amount of the gift, CRA could allege the gift is made by the estate and not deemed to be made in the year of death.

For deaths after 2015, testamentary gifts are deemed to be made by the estate rather than by the deceased. The estate can elect to claim the credit in the deceased’s year of death or the preceding year. A transfer of property must be completed within 60 months after death. For deaths before 2016, the testator was deemed to have made the gift immediately before death and a tax credit was available in the terminal return, or prior year unused credits could be carried back and used to reduce tax in the prior year. The credit can offset 100% of net income for the year of death and the prior year. This credit can be useful in calculating tax in the year of death, since the deceased is deemed to have disposed of capital assets immediately before death (subject to certain exceptions, such as for spousal rollovers) at fair market value, realizing capital gains in that year.

For deaths after 2016, a gift made by will or as a designation under a life insurance policy, RRSP, RRIF or TFSA is deemed to be made by the estate at the time when the property is transferred to the donee. To be eligible for full credits, the gift must be made by a graduated rate estate (“GRE”, as discussed below) entitling the deceased to claim credit in the year of death or immediately preceding year or entitling the GRE to claim credit in the year of transfer or a preceding year of the estate (but only for gifts in the first 36 months). The property that is transferred must have been acquired by the estate as a consequence of death and if there is a direct designation, the transfer must be made as a consequence of death. The credit can be shared or allocated between the individual and the estate, but cannot be claimed twice. An estate can qualify as a GRE for up to 60 months after death. However, if more than 36 months have elapsed since death, the estate will not be able to claim a credit in any preceding year of the estate. If the estate is not a GRE, it can claim a credit in the year of the gift or any of the five following years.

2. Annuities

Charitable organizations can issue annuities, but charitable foundations can be deregistered if they incur ineligible debt obligations. A charity should ensure that it has legal authority to issue annuities under provincial law dealing with insurance or other relevant laws. The charity can purchase an annuity from a financial institution rather than issuing it itself, to reduce its risk of loss. The value of property received from a charity in exchange for a gift must be determined and becomes the cost of the property to the charity. Where an amount is transferred to a charity and the donor receives a stream of annuity payments, the amount of the gift will be equal to the excess of the amount transferred by the donor over the amount that would be required to purchase an annuity providing the same payments.

3. Life Insurance

A charity can benefit from a gift of a life insurance policy in several ways. A gift involving an insurance policy can result in a large donation, at a relatively small cost to the donor. A charity can purchase an insurance policy on the donor’s life on the understanding that the donor (or some other person) will pay the premiums directly to the insurance company, or make cash gifts to the charity, so it can pay them. This is often supported by a pledge to pay the premiums. The charity can issue a tax receipt for the premiums paid. On the death of the donor, the charity will receive the death benefit, which will not be a gift by the donor. A drawback from the charity’s point of view is that there may be no assurance the donor will pay the premiums. If the donor fails to pay, the charity can surrender the policy or pay the premiums using its own funds.

Alternatively, the donor can transfer an existing policy to the charity and agree to pay future premiums. The charity can issue a receipt for the fair market value of the policy, which may not necessarily be the cash surrender value (normally only whole life or universal life policies will have a value) less any outstanding policy loans. The charity can issue a tax receipt for premiums paid. If a qualified valuator determines that the fair market value of the policy exceeds its cash surrender value (less any outstanding policy loans), the higher amount should be the eligible amount in the receipt issued by the charity. The donor will be subject to tax on the amount by which the cash surrender value (less any outstanding policy loans) exceeds the adjusted cost basis (a defined term) of the policy. CRA has stated that this result is not affected by the issuance of an official receipt by the charity reflecting a fair market value that is higher than the cash surrender value.

If the charity is concerned that it will not be able to pay the premiums, the donor (or another donor) can give cash, which the charity can use to buy an annuity providing periodic payments to fund the premiums. The charity should be able to treat the annuity and policy in a way that does not cause problems in meeting its disbursement quota. Alternatively, the charity could rely on a promise from the donor (or another donor) to make annual gifts to pay the premiums. The ability to pay the premiums on a donated policy could be a factor in determining the fair market value of the policy. If the policy is likely to lapse because the charity does not pay the premiums, the fair market value could be reduced. A registered charity is not required to pay tax on its income and should not be adversely affected if a policy is not “exempt”. The eligible amount of a gift of a life insurance policy will be the lesser of its fair market value and the “cost” of the policy to the donor, if the gift is made within three years after the donor acquired it.

The donor can continue to own the policy, and name the charity as the beneficiary. The donor will receive no tax relief for the premiums paid or the value of the policy, since no property is being given to the charity. Under insurance law, the donor can change the beneficiary from the charity to another person. If the charity is the named beneficiary, it will receive the death benefit on the donor’s death. The donor is deemed to have made a gift to the charity immediately before death, if the charity receives the death benefit under the policy within 36 months after death. The fair market value of the gift is deemed to be the fair market value, at the time of the individual’s death, of the right to that transfer. The Department of Finance has stated that “in nearly all cases” the fair market value at death of the right to transfer is “expected to be” the fair market value at death of the money that is ultimately received. A donor can use life insurance proceeds to pay a bequest in a will, naming the estate as beneficiary. On the donor’s death, the estate would receive the death benefit free of tax and pay the bequest to the charity, which would issue a receipt. The credit could reduce tax in the year of death or the prior year, if there are excess credits. In some provinces, probate tax on the value of the proceeds passing through the estate may be a factor. Where life insurance proceeds are paid to an estate and used to pay a bequest, the gift will be treated as a gift by the estate, subject to an election to carry it back to the year of death.

Other arrangements may be tax-effective, such as having a private corporation purchase insurance on the life of one of the shareholders. There are techniques to take advantage of the tax-free proceeds on death, the capital dividend account of the corporation, the rules for taxation of dividends and “post-mortem” planning. Subject to a spousal rollover, capital gains are realized in the year of death. In some cases there can be “double tax” because the deceased owns shares of a corporation that owns assets with unrealized gains. Life insurance can often be used to reduce those gains or the tax, in combination with charitable donations.

In some situations, the features of the policy are shared or ownership of the policy is split. This type of planning raises a number of regulatory and tax issues and requires sophisticated advice for both the donor and the charity. Recent changes prevent arrangements designed to deduct interest on money borrowed by private corporations to buy life insurance policies and use the capital dividend account when the death benefit is paid. It also changed the treatment of some back-to-back arrangements and prescribed life annuities.

Recent changes are designed to ensure that life insurance proceeds received by a private corporation or a partnership do not result in an inappropriate addition to the capital dividend account (for private corporations) or in the adjusted cost base (for partnerships). These and other changes are designed to prevent taxpayers from removing, without appropriate tax, the excess of the fair market value of an insurance policy over its cash surrender value. Other rules reduce the amount added to the capital dividend account, paid-up capital and/or adjusted cost base if a policy was transferred prior to March 22, 2016.

4. Gifts of Residual Interests

A donor can give property to a charity, while retaining the right to use it for his or her lifetime. Alternatively, the donor can establish a charitable remainder trust by transferring assets to the trust, reserving a right to receive payments for life and transferring the balance in the trust on death to a charity. If certain conditions are met, CRA considers the donor has made a current gift. This type of gift could be made during a person's lifetime or by will. The value of the gift will be the fair market value of the transferred property (usually cash) less the present value of the reserved interest, taking into account an appropriate discount rate, the life expectancy of the donor, current interest rates and any other relevant factors. This type of gift is analogous to a charitable annuity. If there is a right to encroach on the capital, the value of the residual interest is considered to be nil. A trust will generally be required for gifts of property other than real estate.

CRA has stated that the gift of a beneficial interest in the capital of a charitable remainder trust is not automatically treated as a gift of a non-qualifying security, but the general anti-avoidance rule might apply if the trust owns non-qualifying securities. CRA will consider whether the trust is “affiliated” with the donor immediately after the gift was made. If the donor retains a beneficial interest in the income of the trust, the donor may be “affiliated” with the trust. Whether this is the case will be a question of fact. A trust and a person are affiliated if the person is a “majority-interest beneficiary”. This includes a person who has a beneficial interest in the income of the trust if it has a fair market value that is greater than 50% of the fair market value of all beneficial interests and a person who, with an affiliated person, holds beneficial interests in the income of the trust if the fair market value of those interests is greater than 50% of the fair market value of all beneficial interests.

Prior to 2016, in some situations where the residual interest in a testamentary trust was not subject to a power to encroach on capital and it was possible to ascribe a value to it, a credit could be claimed for the value of the residual interest that passed under the will, prior to any actual transfer of property to the charity. Now there must be an actual transfer of property and not merely entitlement to receive an amount later.

Using a charitable remainder trust or making a gift of a residual interest by will often involves reliance on administrative policies of CRA and raises a number of technical issues. The Department of Finance had at one time considered changes in the ITA dealing with charitable remainder trusts, but no amendments were ever introduced. Specific advice should be sought before this type of planning is utilized.

5. Gifts of Capital Property

A donor of capital property is deemed to have received proceeds of disposition equal to the fair market value of the property. If the fair market value exceeds the cost, a capital gain will be realized. If the property is depreciable property, recaptured capital cost allowance is included in income. A donor can reduce capital gains tax on a gift of appreciated capital property to a charity by designating the transfer price as an amount not greater than its fair market value and not less than its adjusted cost base. The donor will then be deemed to have disposed of the property for the designated amount and considered to have made a gift of the designated amount when calculating the tax credit or deduction. This enables the donor to avoid realizing a capital gain altogether, or realize only a desired amount of capital gain (for example to offset capital losses). There are restrictions for non-resident individuals disposing of Canadian real estate to a charity.

The amount to be included as a taxable capital gain is nil for gifts of securities traded on a designated stock exchange (such as shares, bonds, warrants and debentures) and mutual fund shares or units or shares or interests in certain segregated funds. It is more tax-efficient for the donor to give securities directly to a charity, rather than sell them and give the proceeds to it.

CRA recently issued a technical interpretation confirming that a contract holder who designates a registered charity as beneficiary of a segregated fund policy does not qualify for the relief in paragraph 38(a.1) from non-recognition of gains.

An employee who exercises a stock option is taxed on a benefit equal to the difference between the fair market value of the shares at the time of exercise and the sum of the exercise price plus the amount paid for the option. In certain circumstances, the employee can claim a deduction against the stock option benefit so only 50% of the benefit is taxable. If an employee stock option is exercised and marketable securities are given to a qualified donee in the year and within 30 days after the option is exercised and if certain other conditions are met, only one-quarter of the benefit is taxable. Individuals who make qualifying donations of marketable securities acquired through such stock options are not required to report any of the benefit.

Taxpayers who own eligible unlisted exchangeable securities can exchange them without causing tax to be payable on a gain. There is no tax on a gain on the exchange, and the donor can receive a receipt for the donation of the listed securities received on the exchange, without recognizing a gain. This beneficial treatment for capital gains on gifts of marketable securities applies to capital gains on the exchange (with some exceptions) of unlisted securities for listed securities where:

(a) at the time they were issued, the unlisted securities included a condition allowing the holder to exchange them for the listed securities;

- (b) the listed securities are the only consideration received on the exchange; and
- (c) the listed securities are donated within 30 days after the exchange.

There are special rules for exchangeable partnership interests. These are intended to ensure that gains attributable to a reduction in the adjusted cost base of the partnership interest are not exempt.

A gift of a “non-qualifying security” to a charity will be ignored in determining the tax deduction or credit in most cases. A non-qualifying security generally includes an obligation of the donor or a non-arm’s length person, a share issued by a corporation with which the donor does not deal at arm’s length or any other security issued by the individual or a non-arm’s length person. There are exceptions for obligations, shares or securities listed on designated stock exchanges and deposits with financial institutions. If the property is disposed of within five years of receipt of the gift, or ceases to be a “non-qualifying security” within the five year period, the person will be treated as having made a gift at that time. This rule does not apply to an “excepted gift”, which is generally a gift to an arm’s length qualified donee that is not a private foundation, if the donor deals at arm’s length with all of the donee’s directors or trustees immediately after the gift. These rules deny a tax credit for certain types of gifts, including shares of privately held companies, subject to some relief if the donee disposes of the security within five years. The rules apply where the non-qualifying security is donated to a trust of which the registered charity is a beneficiary.

Rules dealing with “loan-back” arrangements apply where a person donates property to a charity which is not dealing at arm’s length with the person and receives a loan from the charity, or is allowed to use the property donated to the charity. The fair market value of the gift is reduced for purposes of calculating the tax credit. These rules apply to certain arm’s length arrangements. CRA’s administrative positions on gifts of capital property are set out on its website.

Recognition of a gift is deferred until the time (within five years after the donation) when the qualified donee has disposed of the non-qualifying security for consideration that is not, to any person, another non-qualifying security. An anti-avoidance rule provides that, if as a result of a series of transactions, a particular person holds a non-qualifying security of a donor and the donee has acquired a non-qualifying security of that person or of the donor, the gift will be deferred until such time (within five years of the donation) as the donee disposes of the non-qualifying security for consideration that is not another non-qualifying security of any person.

CRA has stated that where an individual owns “thin” controlling voting shares of a private corporation, under which she is not entitled to receive dividends or to participate beyond a nominal amount on winding up, but controls the corporation, in some circumstances it will treat the value of the shares as more than a nominal amount. A gift of this type of share to a registered charity could offer flexibility in dealing with the valuation issue, particularly if an election is made to treat the amount of the gift as the adjusted cost base of the shares. However, this could raise other issues, including problems under the excess business holdings rules for private foundations and “acquisition of control” issues for charitable foundations.

6. Gifts of Art, Cultural and Ecological Property

(i) Art

Certain gifts of inventory by an artist receive special treatment. In those circumstances, where an appropriate designation is made, an artist is entitled to a credit based on the fair market value of the property but no income is triggered on the disposition.

Artwork is generally considered to be personal-use property unless it is inventory. Personal-use property is property that is used primarily for the personal use or enjoyment and includes jewellery, clothing, furniture, and certain works of art. For purposes of calculating the capital gain or loss, the adjusted cost base and proceeds of disposition of personal-use property are deemed to be at least $1,000. This rule eases the compliance and administrative burden associated with the reporting of dispositions of personal-use property. The $1,000 deemed adjusted cost base and deemed proceeds of disposition for personal-use property does not apply if the property was acquired after February 27, 2000, as part of an arrangement in which the property is given to a charity. Therefore, if this type of property with a value of less than $1,000 is donated to a charity in those circumstances, it will no longer be treated as personal-use property, and any resulting capital gain will be taxable.

(ii) Cultural Property

A gift of certified cultural property to a designated institution will not trigger a capital gain. The donor will be allowed a credit (if an individual) or a deduction (if a corporation) for the fair market value of the property and will not be limited to 75% of income. There are special rules for determining the fair market value of cultural property. In addition, any capital gain on an object that is donated is exempt from tax. The determination is made by the Canadian Cultural Property Export Review Board and there are extensive rules for the procedures to be followed and appeals if the amount determined is not acceptable to the donor. The Board must certify the property and designate the institution. Unused credits or deductions can be carried forward for five years, or back one year in the event of death. Charities receiving gifts of cultural property are subject to a penalty tax in certain circumstances if they dispose of the gifted property within ten years of its receipt. If the gift is part of a “tax shelter gifting arrangement”, the donor cannot use a value for the property in excess of the cost amount.

(iii) Ecological Property

There are similar rules for gifts of ecologically sensitive property to the crown, a municipality or a charity that is approved for the conservation and protection of the environment. There are incentives for owners of ecologically sensitive land to protect that land while at the same time qualifying for a tax benefit. The precise nature of the conveyance of property will depend on legal issues and in some cases there may be split ownership.

Special rules apply when valuing gifts of ecological property. These include gifts of the land itself and gifts of easements over the land. The use of easements provides some flexibility, permitting the owner to retain legal title while fettering its future use and preventing development, but this can raise difficult valuation issues in some cases. The fair market value will be determined by the Minister of the Environment and there are extensive rules for the procedures to be followed and appeals if the amount determined is not acceptable to the donor. As in the case of gifts of cultural property, a charity accepting a gift is subject to a penalty if it disposes of the property within ten years or changes its use without the consent of the Minister of ECCC. Under the Ecological Gifts Program, Environment Canada certifies that land is ecologically sensitive and an expert panel certifies the value.

Deductions or credits for gifts of ecologically sensitive land or interests in that land are available for carry-forward for ten years, rather than the usual five years.

To ensure that donated ecological property is not later used for other purposes, a 50% tax is imposed on the fair market value of the property on a recipient that changes the use of the property or disposes of it without consent of the Minister.

Under the current rules, a gift must be approved on a gift-by-gift basis, unless the recipient is the Crown, a municipality or public body performing a function of government. Under the 2017 budget proposals, approval will be required for gifts to municipalities and public bodies on a gift-by-gift basis, but gifts to the Crown will still not require approval. The transferee will be subject to the 50% tax if it changes the use of the property or disposes of it without consent of the Minister. The Minister will be able to determine whether proposed changes in use of the property would adversely affect conservation initiatives.

Private foundations will no longer be able to receive gifts of ecological property. This is apparently intended to prevent potential conflicts of interest.

The rules deal with civil law issues in Quebec and permit donations of certain types of personal servitudes if they meet a number of conditions, including a requirement that they run for at least one hundred years.

7. Gifts of Inventory

Unlike gifts of capital property, gifts of inventory do not permit the donor to choose an amount between the cost of the property and its fair market value. As a result, a gift of property that is part of the inventory of a business will result in an income inclusion. While there will be a corresponding eligible amount for the gift (the eligible amount will depend on whether any advantage is received by the donor), it is frequently less advantageous to donate inventory rather than capital property. This is one of the reasons why special rules were enacted for gifts of inventory made by artists, as discussed above.

Corporations can claim a deduction for gifts of medicine held in inventory to a registered charity, if the charity has received financial assistance from CIDA and uses the medicine in carrying out its foreign activities. For gifts made on or after July 1, 2008, the medicine must have been available to be used by the charity at least six months prior to its expiration date and must qualify as a drug (within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act) which meets certain technical requirements. In addition, a prescribed return must be filed and the charity must in the opinion of the Minister of International Cooperation meet certain conditions prescribed by regulation. This limits the situations in which corporations can claim tax relief for donations of medicine from inventory.

Under the current rules, a corporation is entitled to claim a special additional deduction equal to the lesser of 50% of the excess of the value of the medicine over its cost and the cost itself. This was intended to encourage corporations to donate medicine for international relief. Under the budget proposals, this measure will be repealed, apparently because the Department of Finance considers that there has been relatively low participation and there are high compliance costs for the charities that receive the donations. This change will not affect the ability of the corporation to claim the standard deduction based on the fair market value of the donated medicine.

8. Gifts to the Crown

A gift to Her Majesty in right of Canada or Her Majesty in right of a Province (a “crown gift”) is subject to the same income limitation as other gifts, i.e. 75% of the donor’s income for the year plus 25% of any taxable capital gain, plus an amount equal to 25% of recapture of previously claimed capital cost allowance. Consequently, crown gifts provide the same tax relief as gifts to other qualified donees. The crown will include an agent of the crown, and gifts to the museums listed in the Museums Act (including, for instance, the National Gallery of Canada, the Canadian Museum of Civilization, the Canadian Museum for Human Rights and the Canadian Museum of Nature) are treated as gifts to the crown.

9. Designations Under RRSPs, RRIFs, TFSAs and Insurance Policies

Donations made as a consequence of a direct designation of proceeds of RRSPs, RRIFs or TFSAs to a charity on the death of an individual qualify as gifts eligible for the individual donation tax credit, if the transfer of funds from RRSPs or RRIFs or TFSAs to the charity occurs within 60 months after death. The fair market value of the gift is deemed to be the fair market value, at the time of the individual’s death, of the right to the transfer. Since the balance in an RRSP or RRIF is treated as income in the year of death, in the absence of a rollover to a spouse, the credit for a gift to charity in the year of death will effectively eliminate the tax otherwise payable on the balance, if there is a direct designation and an election to carrying it back. This is the same result as if there were a bequest by will of the amount included in income under the RRSP or RRIF, without having to determine the amount in advance. Although CRA will allow spouses to share the credit for a donation, this is not the case for gifts made by will. One spouse can make a gift and the other spouse can utilize the credit while alive, but on death only the estate or the deceased can claim credit and there is no opportunity to shift it to a surviving spouse.

Gifts by will and by direct designation in RRSPs, RRIFs and TFSAs or insurance policies are treated as gifts made by the estate. This provides more flexibility. If the credit is more than can be used in the year of death or the year prior to death, the estate can carry the balance forward under the usual rules. The concept of a GRE is important. Gifts made by will and by direct designation of insurance policies, RRSPs, RRIFs and TFSAs are deemed to have been made when the property is actually transferred to the charity and the estate can choose to carry back all or part of that donation. It is unclear how the rules will apply where there are intervening life interests created by will or in the case of charitable remainder trusts.

10. Miscellaneous Issues

(i) Social Media

Social media have become relevant in some donation arrangements. Some charities raise small amounts by way of text messages. Where donors are not concerned about receipts, this can be an effective way to raise money in small amounts from a wide range of donors. Similarly, “crowdfunding” techniques might be useful for some charities. If a charity engages in a concerted effort to raise money through crowdfunding, it might be regarded as carrying on a business. A charity that carries on business is subject to revocation of registration unless (in the case of a charitable organization or public foundation), the business is “related” to its charitable purposes. One registered charity facilitates the receipt of donations by way of text messages and other electronic means. Another organization enables charities to use crowdfunding and provides access to a broad range of donors, on the theory that they will give small amounts. The donors receive an official receipt. These arrangements do not seem to cross the line and cause the charity to be carrying on a business, but simply constitute another form of fundraising.

(ii) Dividends After Death

When an individual dies, the executors can file a separate tax return reporting any “rights or things” owned by the deceased that have been transferred to a beneficiary, such as a dividend declared by a corporation but not received at the date of death. When an election is made, the amount received is income of the beneficiary. This often occurs where shares are transferred by will and the recipient is “beneficially interested” in the estate. If a corporation has declared but not paid a dividend prior to the death and the shares are transferred to a charity under the will, the dividend will not be subject to tax when received by the charity. If a dividend is declared and received by the estate after death, that dividend could be taxed in the estate, even if the shares are transferred to the charity. If the shares are transferred to the charity and the dividend is declared and paid after the transfer, the dividend will not be subject to tax in the hands of the charity. A number of factors are often relevant in dealing with private corporation shares, death and charitable donations.

(iii) Canada/U.S. Issues

Under the Canada-United States Income Tax Convention (the “Treaty”), Canadian residents are entitled to relief for gifts made to eligible U.S. organizations, subject to 75% of income for the year from U.S. sources. There are rules without that limit for gifts made to a university or college at which the donor or a family member was a student.

The U.S. organization is not a “qualified donee”, as defined in the ITA. CRA has taken the position that a Canadian registered charity cannot treat such a gift as a gift to a qualified donee. Registered charities cannot make gifts other than in the course of carrying out their charitable activities to anyone other than a qualified donee. This is often a factor in the plans for donors who wish to assist Canadian charities in carrying on activities in other countries. There is more latitude for the donor to make a gift directly to the U.S. organization than to make a gift to a registered Canadian charity, with a view to having it support the U.S. organization with a grant.

(iv) Split Receipting

Under the “split receipting” rules, the value of a gift is the excess of the value of the donated property over the value of any benefit or advantage received by the donor or a person not dealing at arm’s length with the donor. This will apply where some consideration is received from the charity, such as recognition, a small gift, membership, a meal, etc. A charity must place a value on any benefit received by the donor in exchange for the payment, and issue a receipt for the “eligible” amount, even if the benefit is not from the charity itself. As discussed below, the 2016 budget proposes relieving rules for GST/HST where a donor receives an inducement from a charity subject to the split-receipting rules.

CRA recently issued guidance on the split-receipting rules and the concept of deemed fair market value. The guidance deals with the requirement for an intention to give, the amount of an advantage and the nominal threshold which disregards an advantage that does not exceed the lesser of 10% of the fair market value of the property and $75. An advantage will not be nominal if its fair market value cannot be determined.

(v) Tax Shelters

As a result of perceived abuses, the value of the property donated to a charity cannot exceed its cost, if the gift occurs within three years of acquisition of the property by the donor, or if the donor acquired the property within the preceding ten years and it is reasonable to conclude that one of the main reasons for acquiring it was to make the gift to a qualified donee, regardless of the actual value of the property. If property is acquired with any expectation that it may be given to a registered charity during the lifetime of the owner, its value cannot exceed its cost. This does not apply to gifts of inventory, marketable securities, Canadian real estate, certified cultural property or approved ecological property or to gifts on death, but applies to gifts of cultural property if the donor acquired the property as part of a “tax shelter gifting arrangement”. The intention of the donor when the donated property is acquired is relevant. If one of the main reasons for acquiring the property was to make a gift (other than by will), the donor may have to use the acquisition cost as the fair market value at the time of the gift. For gifts that are subject to the three-year rule or the 10-year rule there are extensive “tracing” rules to deal with transfers of property prior to the time of the gift.

The reassessment period for participants in tax shelters or “reportable transactions” is extended until three years after filing where the information that should have been filed by the tax shelter promoter or with respect to the reportable transaction has not been filed on a timely basis or has not been filed at all. In most situations, if a taxpayer files a notice of objection to an assessment, there is no requirement to pay the amount in dispute. To discourage taxpayers from participating in charitable donation tax shelters and to reduce the risk that unpaid amounts will not be collected after objections and appeals have been exhausted, CRA can collect 50% of the disputed amount of tax, interest or penalties even if an objection or appeal is pending.

(vi) Anti-Avoidance Rules

An anti-avoidance rule can apply to a charity that receives cash from a donor and uses it to buy property from the donor at more than its cost. These rules are very far reaching and can have a significant effect on a number of situations in which donors expect to receive credit for the value of the property rather than its cost. CRA expects charities to be diligent in establishing the fair market value based on the “cost” approach, and in determining the value of any advantage that would reduce the eligible amount of a gift. If a donor fails to inform the registered charity of circumstances that reduce the eligible amount, despite the amount shown on the official receipts, the eligible amount will be nil. This is a significant risk for a donor who is prepared to gamble that an advantage will not reduce the eligible amount of the gift. Registered charities should review the circumstances in which gifts of property are received when determining the eligible amount of the gift. In many cases, this will require consultations with the donor.

(vii) Intermediate Sanctions

CRA can assess charities for intermediate sanctions, which give it the option of assessing tax or penalties rather than revoking registration, for various types of non-compliance, such as issuing improper receipts, carrying on an unrelated business (in the case of a charitable foundation or charitable organization) or carrying on any business (in the case of a private foundation), acquiring control of a corporation, conferring an undue benefit and other defaults. The rules for creating endowments, transfers between charities and meeting the disbursement quota require charities to plan carefully. Anti-avoidance rules prevent “trafficking” in unused charitable donations made by corporations.

(viii) Private Foundations

A private foundation that owns more than 2% of any class of shares of a corporation is required to report its holdings together with those of persons not dealing at arm's length with the foundation when filing its T3010 return. Where the foundation holds more than 2% and the combined holdings of the foundation and non-arm's length persons exceed 20%, either the foundation or the other persons (or the group collectively) must divest to below 20%. If the divestiture does not occur within stipulated periods of time, the foundation will be subject to penalties. CRA can treat non-arm's length persons as dealing at arm's length, if sufficient reasons are given.

Private foundations are subject to more stringent compliance. For instance, they cannot carry on any business (a charitable organization or public foundation can carry on a "related" business). There are restrictions on acquiring control of corporations, the rules dealing with non-qualifying securities are a concern and the 2017 budget will repeal the ability to transfer ecological property to private corporations in a tax-advantageous manner.

(ix) Disbursement Quota

The disbursement quota requires a registered charity to spend at least 3.5% of the average value of its accumulated investment assets in the preceding two years on its own charitable activities or by making gifts to qualified donees. Charitable organizations with less than $100,000 of such assets and charitable foundations with less than $25,000 of such assets are not subject to this requirement. Previous gifts with restrictions that prevent the charity from spending the capital will be restricted under charity or trust law, after the disbursement quota rules were relaxed.

(x) Refund of Gifts

CRA can issue a reassessment to disallow a credit or deduction and make consequential assessments if donated property is returned to the donor by the qualified donee. The qualified donee returning a gift must issue a revised receipt and send a copy to CRA if the amount changes by more than $50. Qualified donees must file an information return to disclose returned gifts.

(xi) List of Qualified Donees

CRA maintains a publicly available list of qualified donees, including registered charities, RCAAAs, Canadian municipalities, certain municipal and public bodies performing a function of government in Canada, certain housing corporations, prescribed foreign universities and certain foreign charities. Most qualified donees are subject to some of the compliance rules that previously applied to registered charities and are required to maintain and make available proper books and records and issue proper receipts. Failure to do so could lead to suspension of receipting privileges, removal from the list of qualified donees or revocation of registration, in the case of RCAAAs. RCAAAs are required to have the promotion of amateur athletics in Canada as their exclusive purpose and function and are subject to rules dealing with the conferral of undue benefits and carrying on an unrelated business, similar to the rules that apply to registered charities. In some situations, a prescribed foreign university may have a relationship with other entities, such as teaching hospitals, that could expand the ways a gift can be applied, without running afoul of concerns that it is acting as a mere conduit.

CRA can refuse to register, or it can revoke the registration, of a charity or RCAA or suspend its receipting privileges if a director or equivalent official is found to have been involved in certain inappropriate conduct. This generally would be the case if that person has been found guilty of a criminal offence in Canada (or outside Canada, if that offence, committed in Canada, would be a criminal offence) relating to financial dishonesty and has not received a pardon. It also applies to directors or equivalent officials who had been involved in the operation of a charity or RCAA that was engaged in serious non-compliance for which its registration was revoked within the past five years, or who were "promoters" of a "gifting arrangement" or other tax shelter in which a registered charity or RCAA participated, if the registration of the charity or RCAA was revoked within the past five years. There is no requirement to disclose the existence of ineligible individuals in an annual return and CRA will use an educational process if it finds ineligible individuals are acting as trustees or directors, and ask the registered charity or RCAA to remove them. This could raise non-tax issues.

(xii) Graduated Rate Estates

There will be a deemed disposition of capital property immediately before death at fair market value unless there is a spousal rollover. For deaths after 2015, the credit will not be available until the estate transfers the property to a charity within 60 months after death. However, for transfers made after 36 months, the credit cannot be carried back to a previous year of the estate.

The capital gain will be based on the fair market value of the property at the date of death, but the charitable receipt will be based on the value of the property when the transfer occurs. If the value of the property fluctuates (which is almost always likely to be the case, except for property with a clearly fixed value), the value of the gift will be more or less than the value used to determine the capital gain. This presents a potential mismatch, along with the concern about the interest cost, if the transfer does not occur until after the terminal return has been filed.

There are issues about transfers of the residue of an estate with an intervening life interest. Jurisprudence has established that a gift of the residue of an estate to a charity is treated as a current gift, regardless of the fact that the charity does not receive the property until later, as long as the value of the residual interest can be calculated using actuarial principles, and there is no discretion to encroach on capital prior to the death of the income beneficiary. The value of the residual interest is determined by subtracting the current value of the life interest, based on various assumptions, from the value of the assets, as in the case of a charitable remainder trust. Gifts of residual interests will no longer be allowed until there is an actual transfer of property.

If there is a delay in completing the transfer of property by will, there may be questions about income received on that property before the transfer. CRA says the estate cannot allocate the income to the charity and deduct it in computing its income and also treat it as a charitable donation. The estate will be able to choose one course or the other, but not both. If income earned on property not transferred until after death might be regarded as income of the estate, "payable" to the charity, deductible in computing the estate's income and included in the income of the charity, then this should be relatively neutral and not cause tax consequences for the estate or the charity. On the other hand, if the income is treated as part of the gift to the charity, there might be a delay if the property has not been transferred and the time frame for recognizing the donation is delayed. For deaths before 2016, the gift was treated as a gift in the year of death and the income from that property would likely be regarded as either income payable to the charity (and deductible by the estate) or part of the gift and thus included in the amount of the receipt for the year of death.

Nik's Journey

It was halfway through his Grade 3 year when Nik suffered two serious and life-threatening paediatric strokes. Nik underwent numerous procedures to alleviate the brain swelling, and after nine months in the hospital, with intensive rehab therapy, Nik was discharged and finally allowed to return home. When he went back to school, Karen was the teaching assistant assigned to work one-on-one with Nik. She knew that the experience of helping Nik return to normal life at school would be both challenging and rewarding.

Nik arrived at school ready and excited to start Grade 4. He wore a helmet to protect the side of his head that had been opened during surgery. He had to learn how to write with his left hand, and navigate the world with some limitations to his peripheral vision, but none of this slowed him down. His determination and desire to resume life was a strong motivator for his rehab sessions, along with a good dose of stubbornness! Nik and Karen had the opportunity to work together at school for three incredible years. It was during that time that Nik was granted his wish by Make-A-Wish. He was very excited about his upcoming wish trip and discussed it with Karen often. She could see that he loved getting special attention about something positive and exciting in his life.

Nik's family moved to a new city a few years later and it was a tearful goodbye for everyone at his school as they said farewell to an amazing student and friend. Karen and Nik have kept in touch over the years and recently Karen decided that she wanted to honour Nik in a very special way.

Karen shares why she decided to donate to Make-A-Wish

"Last year, my husband and I discussed making a donation to an organization that we feel a connection to and I decided it would be a great tribute to Nik to make a contribution to Make-A-Wish. We hoped that the donation would help other children like him.

"The fact that you don't necessarily know the people who you are helping isn't always important. It's a way of giving back and it's wonderful to know that families get to have this special time together like Nik did with his family. I saw wish kids on a flight to Florida for their wishes when I took my granddaughters there just six weeks after I made my donation to Make-A-Wish. It was so nice to see this come full circle.

"You really get a feeling of satisfaction knowing that the funds will make a difference for kids who are having a difficult time and that a wish will offer a positive distraction. We know that life offers no guarantees and if my family member had an illness, I know I'd like to enjoy some special time with them. To think a child is going through a problem where they deal with fear and anxiety every day and that there's something like this that can make them and their parents happier is truly incredible."

Nik's mom, Maxine, shares how the wish impacted their family

"A wish fills an important need; it was essential for our healing as a family. It offered so much hope and was a great journey that also allowed Nik to be an ambassador for Make-A-Wish. A wish helps kids make their dreams come true and reach their full potential.

"Nik is now 22 and is doing great these days. As a result of his condition, he has limitations to his mobility and swimming ended up being an incredible activity that he excels at. A big part of his wish was related to swimming and it's still important to him today. In 2011, Nik competed as a swimmer in the Parapan American Games in Mexico and he is now training full-time with the goal of going to Tokyo for the 2020 Paralympic Games."

Karen chose to donate to Make-A-Wish® in honour of her former student, Nikolas, who had his wish granted when he was nine years old. In 2004, without warning, Nik suffered two strokes which severely impacted his health. When his family found out he was eligible for a wish, they were excited that Nik would have a special experience after a very difficult time. Nik wished to stay in a castle with a bowling alley and swimming pool (his two favourite activities). Make-A-Wish granted his wish in 2005 and gave him a family vacation at the Fairmont Banff Springs Hotel.

CHARITY FILINGS

Canadian Media Is Interested

The T3010 Registered Charity Information Return form is filed by every Canadian registered charity every year within 6 months of the end of the charity's fiscal year. This form is increasingly being used by funders, donors, regulators and others. For example, there have been a number of recent stories in the media that have made use of the information captured in the T3010.

The great thing about the T3010 is that it is an annual "census" of the charity sector. You can look at information on one charity or on all Canadian registered charities.

The T3010 form is in some ways complicated. After all, we have a very diverse 86,000 charities with over $240 billion in revenue. Understanding the T3010 requires an understanding of not only the form but also the charity sector. The T3010 can tell you a lot about a charity, but there is also a lot it does not tell you.

One cannot rely on the T3010 and/or financial statements to tell you about the worthiness of a particular charity. At best, the T3010 and financial statements can only tell you a small part of the picture, and give you ideas for questions to ask.

Focusing in on only a small number of statistics or metrics from the many pieces of information included in the T3010 and financial statements makes the problem even worse.

Also, there are many questions that could be asked on the T3010 that could provide greater understanding of the charity sector. The T3010 does not have even one question on how many volunteers the organization has, and what amount of time or value they contribute to the charity.

The Globe and Mail on March 15, 2017 had an article "Canadian veterans' charities: Do you know where your donor dollars are going." The headline is more sensational than the actual article. The article compares a number of veterans' charities. The article relies heavily on T3010 information, perhaps too heavily.

The article seems to confuse at times money spent on salaries with money spent on administration. Paying a person to do a charitable program is a charitable expense and not an administrative one.

The article notes: "Like all charities, those veterans' groups have administrative costs which Revenue Canada requires to be posted online. But different reporting methods used by the various organizations make it difficult to determine just how much is being spent on operations and how much is going to the veterans themselves."

Is there a dichotomy between "operations" versus "going to the veterans themselves"? By operations, does it mean administration or overhead? Hiring to help soldiers with PTSD is not money going to the veterans themselves, but perhaps it is charitable and a good way to spend money.

The article does raise some good points - including how can a major charity report no fundraising and administrative costs? In most cases, if significant charities don't have fundraising or administrative costs, they are completing the form incorrectly.

Another problem when trying to work out 'where are your dollars going' is when one looks at one particular year and does not do a multi-year analysis. Not sure if it would have made much of a difference in this case but with many charities, especially those that are newer and rely on fundraising revenue, there may be tremendous fluctuations from year to year.

Mark Blumberg

The second media story, also on March 15, 2017, was from the CBC entitled: "SARBC 'extremely shocked' over North Shore Rescue fundraising lawsuit." It deals with allegations of one charity that another charity is inappropriately using its name to deceptively fundraise. That matter is being litigated and presumably more information will come out in the future.

The CBC uses the T3010 more by way of background. The CBC notes "SARBC is also a registered charity. According to CRA documents, it raised $159,021 through phone solicitation last year while paying $43,471 to the company it hired to do the calling. Older tax returns show that in some years SARBC has raised $200,000 through phone solicitation. It also claims over $1 million in assets." This is probably a more appropriate use of the T3010.

Remember that it is important for charities to file their T3010 on time, and very important that it is accurate. The T3010 information may or may not be utilized by the media correctly, but if your filings are incorrect then you will have to fight an even more difficult uphill battle.

Charity Part of the Family

Teresa and Wayne Scherle's history with the Canadian Red Cross goes back to Teresa's first memorable interaction Christmas Eve, 1983. That day in the Woodstock, Ontario area, southwest of Toronto, snow conditions caused treacherous driving, stranding drivers for hours in their cars and trucks.

Teresa was volunteering at a community centre when she got a call asking if they could shelter people who had been stranded on the highway. Of course she agreed and that is when Teresa saw Red Cross volunteers in action. She was amazed at the efficiency and confidence they demonstrated, bringing in donated food from a local grocery store, transporting people to houses in the community to be billeted for the night, and connecting them with friends and family to tell them they were okay.

That transformational winter's night made it easy for Teresa to say Yes when she was asked to join the Woodstock Red Cross Council in 1984.

Transformational Night

She spent the next 13 years volunteering on her local Red Cross council, as well as the Youth Committee and the Ontario Zone Council. She also served on the Canadian Red Cross International Committee and was a volunteer Chair of International Service for Ontario. Teresa said, "Working with the Youth Committee and doing International workshops in the local branches was one of my favourite things to do. It was a wonderful opportunity to disseminate information about the Red Cross to anyone who was interested. I know we were reaching the next group of volunteers and supporters; it is good to know that our work continues to help the movement."

Humanitarian Spirit

Including a gift to the Canadian Red Cross in her will was a very natural thing to do, Teresa said, because she had seen care, compassion and humanity – all the guiding principles – in action. An international traveler, she has witnessed firsthand the work that was needed and how little it takes to make significant improvement for so many lives in places like Africa. As Canadians, Teresa believes we can all take pride in our humanitarian spirit and the way we reach out to people in crisis, both here in Canada and overseas.

Teresa and Wayne have each included a gift for the Canadian Red Cross in their will. Of course they consider their loved ones a priority, but they believe that the Red Cross deserves a place in their wills alongside family and friends. Because by leaving a gift they are also helping to make sure that, if someone they love is ever in need in the future, the Red Cross will be there to help and look after them. Teresa says this is a family affair that will see to the needs of home, country and abroad.

The work of the Canadian Red Cross is never finished. Earthquakes, fires, floods, famine and conflict continue to put lives at risk and tear families apart. The Red Cross is on the front lines responding to these emergencies, and behind the scenes helping communities build resilience against the next crisis. Teresa and Wayne know their legacy will help bring all the gifts of humanitarian care where it is needed after they are gone.

Personal Impact

Through her volunteer roles, Teresa grew to admire the work of the Red Cross volunteers and staff. "It is the personal impact that this great organization has on people's lives that inspired us to include the Red Cross in our Wills" Teresa said. "We hope that our gifts will enable the Red Cross to do its work and help as many people as it can."

For Teresa, the Red Cross has always felt like family. Its principles clearly align with her personal ones, so it made the decision to include the Red Cross in their wills a natural one. "Every time I walk into the local Red Cross office it feels like I'm coming home."

PERSONAL PHILANTHROPY

Inspiring Canada's Affluent

Over the past 25 years our country has seen a slow erosion in the relative size of its donor base, at least as measured by those claiming charitable donations on their tax returns. The percentage of tax filers claiming donations fell from a high of 29.5% in 1990 to 21.4% in 2014, the most recent year available. However, total donations have more than doubled over that same period with major gift donations playing an increasingly larger role.

Many in the sector believe there is an increasing urgency to reawaken – or perhaps even awaken – philanthropy among Canadians. What does the picture really look like and how great is the giving potential?

Imagine Canada has created a new initiative that would target individual Canadians.

Inspire Giving

The aim of The Personal Philanthropy Project is to incent and inspire personal financial giving.

Through government surveys we had a good sense, in broad strokes, of what motivates Canadians to give to charity – compassion, personal affinity for a cause, etc. – but we lack a solid understanding of the actual triggers behind these motivations. And although we have a basic idea of why people choose to not give – they want to spend their money somewhere else; they have reservations about how their money is being spent; they don't like how requests for donations are being made; etc. – we believe it would be invaluable to understand the attitudes that precipitate giving. What are the “sticky” ideas?

Finally, what are the inherent reasons Canadians have that may prevent them from giving, and potentially from giving more?

In 2014, Imagine Canada conducted a proprietary research study. We conducted 56 in-depth phone interviews with men and women between the ages of 35 and 64 from all regions across the country.

Individuals were required to meet an annual household income of at least $200,000 with minimum investable assets of $500,000, excluding their primary residence. As an additional qualifier, we also screened each participant for a minimum annual charitable donation of $500

Above Average

These individuals donated an average per annum of $2,694. Yet, despite their relative affluence, they overwhelmingly perceive themselves as “run-of-the-mill” in terms of their means. Most believe their annual donations to charitable causes are generous and above average, without having any benchmark comparison. When asked about using some kind of scale for determining an appropriate giving amount, like a giving calculator, very few expressed interest, with many stating that such a tool might be useful for others, but not for them. This aligned with a belief that their giving is above average. Most recognized the benefit of having a formal, structured approach to giving, but few indicated a desire or intent to change their giving patterns.

Many, however, did see value in understanding where they “fit in” relative to others. Such information might encourage these individuals to give more. Most participants considered their contributions significant, valued, and impactful, seeing their philanthropic giving as a personal and social responsibility and something they are genuinely proud of, regardless of the amount.

Michèle Benoit
Imagine Canada

Few see their giving as posing any kind of financial “stretch” to their personal household circumstances.

The majority of study participants began giving when they were in their 20s or 30s. Giving back by way of charitable donations, at least in part, was simply “a given” for many, and was attributed to their upbringing and family modelling. Some said that work and colleagues influenced their giving patterns early in their careers, often responding to peer requests or getting involved with workplace giving programs. Personal milestones such as marriage, parenthood, and health events also played a significant role. For many study participants, door-to-door solicitations were a common trigger for establishing initial giving, and continue to be a motivator to this day.

Primary Causes

Giving is cause-based for the majority with annual, recurring donations going to a small cluster of organizations that champion that cause. These individuals tend to focus on two to three primary causes, generally representing 65% of their total giving. Very few annual patterns emerged, as donors gave “through the year” due to need or their commitments to fundraising events. A small minority reported donating in the final quarter to take advantage of annual eligible tax benefits.

Meanwhile, most reported that they do not have a financial, budgetary, or recipient plan for their charitable giving. Many said they keep a “mental tally” but they could not articulate how they come to that amount. And while the study confirmed that most put little thought into giving levels, very few reported any plans to increase their charitable giving over time. The common pattern for these individuals is that donations gradually increased as salaries increased, or was linked to bonuses, but then they quickly plateaued after a few years. Further, if their financial situation changed for the worse over time, their charitable contributions decreased accordingly, and most often remained at that adjusted lower amount, even if their financial situation later improved.

Total reported giving by all Canadians in 2012 was $9.4 billion. As discovered in the proprietary research, giving amounts also rose with increased income: Fifty-five percent of those who earned more than $100,000 annually reported charitable donations, while 80 percent of top-bracket earners of more than $4 million reported charitable giving. The 1% threshold of giving was reached when annual incomes reached $300,000.

Percentage of Income

When considering giving as a percentage of donor income only – and taking non-donors out of the equation – donations still generally rise with income levels and show fairly healthy levels of giving at all earning grades. Individuals who earn $50,000 or less per year give more to charity as a percentage of their income than those with an annual income between $100,000 and $900,000. Canadians earning $50,000 or less, who donate to charities, donate on average 2.29% of their income to charity. However, those earning $100,000 per year (who donate to charities) give 1.63% to charity as a percentage of their income, and that slowly increases to 2.02% at an annual income of $800,000. Earners at $900,000 give 2.55% of their income to charity, and donations continue to rise from that level of income.

If all those earning more than $100,000 per year were to give at least one percent to charity, and current donors already giving more than one percent maintained those giving levels, annual giving would rise by $1.6 billion. And, if all Canadians were to give at least one percent, while current donors already giving more than one percent maintained their giving levels, giving would rise by $10.2 billion.

What this really means, then, is that Canadians have the power to give! And the size of the prize is potentially billions of additional dollars in giving.

It is reasonable to say that Canadians can be doing more.

The Project's end goal is the shaking-up of a system. A shift that ensures that Canadians recognize their capacity to give generously.

While considerable research and data is available about high net worth donors and their giving patterns, both from Canada and abroad, very little exists about how to encourage increased giving.

There are two possible approaches to investigate:

Standardized Approach

The "Standardized Approach" is an intervention that will alter the giving pattern of the target audience, which will, in turn, aim to increase charitable giving. This approach will provide information to help guide donors about an "appropriate" annual donation amount relative to their personal and financial circumstances. The four Standardized Approach interventions include:

- A giving calculator that provides an "appropriate" amount to give based on personal key variables such as income, net worth, life stage, age, debt, etc. It can be used as a stand-alone tool or as a support tool for professionals working with donors and clients.
- The donor is provided with a recommended percentage of income, "does the math" and then makes an informed donation decision. This could serve as a social norming intervention.
- Predetermined tiers provide the donor with an opportunity to gauge where they "fit in"

compared to others

- The peer influencer model allows the donor to learn, either directly or indirectly, of a financial peer's annual giving.

Systematic Approach

The "Systematic Approach" is a mobilization of personal finance professionals that significantly elevates philanthropic discussions with affluent Canadians with the goal of increasing personal charitable giving. This testing approach will engage with personal finance professionals to identify means, processes, and/or products that will support and encourage values-based conversations; help grow the advisor-client relationship; and lead to a more intentional culture around philanthropy, and ultimately increase charitable donations.

Imagine Canada is testing the four interventions in the Standardized Approach as part of a quantitative survey of 2,000 Canadians with above-average earnings and investable assets. We launched the survey in February and we will share findings by the summer of 2017.

Researchers have also carried out qualitative research out across the country to examine the Systematic Approach. They have carried out focus groups with personal finance professionals since April of 2016 and completed these in January 2017. These sessions considered whether wealth professionals could be an effective lever to promote more informed and higher levels of giving by establishing deeper communication strategies. We will also share the findings from this research by the summer of 2017.

SOCIAL INNOVATION

What Are We Talking About

In British Columbia, dozens of Lower Mainland fishers operating family-owned boats no longer have the size to sell to wholesalers. Instead, they band together to create a membership-driven club; subscribers can purchase fresh catch right off the dock. The result: sustainable food production, improved self-sufficiency for a traditional community, and experiential consumerism with a social benefit.

Across the world, in some remote regions of sub-Saharan Africa, low-income households use a new mobile banking app that allows them to lease inexpensive rooftop solar panels using a rent-to-own scheme. The result: reduced greenhouse gas emissions from generators, improved school participation by children who have light to do their homework, and the accumulation of equity in families with few assets.

Amidst the industrial precincts of New York City and Chicago, grassroots community organizations eye decommissioned elevated rail spurs and begin to envision them as potential new green spaces in these concrete jungles. These groups raise funds locally for planning and design studies, which eventually create the political momentum needed to secure serious funding. The result: linear parks like the High Line and The 606 revitalize working class neighbourhoods and produce new public spaces frequented by locals and visitors alike.

Somewhere in between, in high-needs suburban communities, the Toronto Community Foundation underwrites a new type of after-school program, Beyond 3:30, that brings recent teachers' college grads and local non-profits right into the schools to provide non-traditional activities geared specifically to middle-school students. The result: improved nutritional practices and physical activity for the kids, and valuable experience for new teachers.

All these projects could plausibly be described as examples of social innovation: undertakings that don't neatly fit into conventional boxes, but deliver multiple social or environment benefits and even profits, all while holding out the potential for the sort of scalability that promises broader transformation.

Indeed, those working in the non-profit sector are more than familiar with the phrase. After all, "social innovation" seems to have attained the kind of ubiquity that "sustainable development" achieved after former Norwegian Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland released her era-defining report challenging nations to find ways to reconcile economic growth with environmental stewardship.

But while funders, policymakers and even companies with active corporate social responsibility (CSR) divisions are eager to describe the initiatives and institutions they support as socially innovative, many of those who work in the non-profit world characterize this aspirational term as both nebulous and trendy: easy to spot with the benefit of hindsight, but tricky to operationalize and difficult to measure. "The challenge I see for this concept is that no one knows precisely what it means," muses World Wildlife Fund Canada President David Miller. "Honestly," adds James Tansey, executive director of the Centre for Social Innovation and Impact Investing at the University of British Columbia, "there's an endless debate about what's in and what's out."

The discussion, which has played out in recent years at numerous international conferences and in the pages of academic and philanthropic publications, is hardly a matter of definitional nit-picking. Most non-profits are now under intense pressure to cast their proposals and grants in the language of social innovation, which is to say outcomes, impact, deliverables, and even social enterprise subsidiaries.

Moreover, following game changing developments in the United States and the United Kingdom, provincial and federal governments in recent years have sought to hitch their policy wagons to a social innovation agenda that could encompass everything from tax incentives and dedicated funds to new legal structures designed to enable social investment. But for those familiar with such policy debates, the persistent lack of consensus has produced a mixed record – some movement on certain elements of a broad agenda, but also back-sliding and stasis.

The answer to the question – what are we talking about when we talk about social innovation? – could re-shape the relationship between governments, private investors, and civil society for a generation to come.

In Waterloo, Ontario, in the years following Blackberry's near collapse, hundreds of former Research In Motion engineers and managers began setting up tiny tech outfits, most of them minimally financed, bootstrap businesses. Their founders were driven by ideas that responded to some problem or friction they'd identified. Some had to do with optimizing a technological system, but many others had a more social focus – for example, a firm called D2L, which provides students and teachers with a novel way of sharing information about assignments, readings, tests, etc.

As in other tech hubs, like Boston and Silicon Valley, Waterloo's innovation scene encompasses a community of entrepreneurs driven more by a desire to solve problems than make mega-bucks; dense social networks of patient funders willing to invest in early stage firms, and fleet-footed companies that know how to make rapid course corrections and withstand the occasional mistake. They also tend to be global in outlook: more than anything, innovation-driven firms aim to scale.

In some respects, the start-up universe has some interesting similarities to the world of successful social innovation: a search for novel solutions to longstanding problems, funders with long horizons, and an outlook that prizes collaboration and new alliances over proposals that emerge entirely from within well-established institutions, be those governments or non-profits. "It's about doing things differently than were traditionally done in our sector," says WWF's Miller.

Those who have closely examined successful examples of social innovation can identify clear patterns, such as projects or policies that require cross-sectoral collaborations that go beyond traditional funding or philanthropic arrangements. "If you're going to move the needle on homelessness, climate change, or reconciliation and you're just in your own vertical, think again," says Ken Gauthier, president of Urban Matters CCC, a Kelowna-based social enterprise.

Cherise Burda, the former director of the Pembina Institute's Ontario division, offers the example of how that organization, an Alberta-based environmental group, made a conscious choice to establish partnerships with the energy companies that often find themselves in the crosshairs of environmental advocates. Pembina's approach was to negotiate research and even advocacy partnerships with multinationals like Royal Dutch Shell, on the understanding that the environmentalists wouldn't pull their punches or doctor their results.

In fact, such environmental-corporate engagement strategies have delivered game-changing results in the past. For example, in the 1990s, when a consortium of environmental NGOs led by Forest Ethics re-wrote the traditional advocacy playbook during a dramatic showdown over clear-cutting the Great Bear Rainforest. Led by one-time Greenpeace activist Tzeporah Berman, the group focused on consumers and high-visibility print publications like the Victoria's Secret catalogue.

The campaign, as Berman later explained, sought to encourage large logging interests to adopt certified sustainable forest practices, which they could then promote to their customers and other stakeholders. "We're pretty good at saying 'No, this is wrong, we oppose this,'" she said. "But identifying solutions that we can support is a very difficult thing." The result, a historic accord that protected tens of millions of hectares of old growth, stands as not only a great achievement in Canadian environmental politics, but, as importantly, an enduring case study in socially innovative advocacy.

Engagement with non-traditional allies is critical and a hallmark of this sort of work. Moreover, the participants in that drama succeeded in re-conceptualizing and reframing a well-established dynamic. For funders looking for evidence of social innovation in proposals, evidence of this kind of thinking is critical.

Tansey points to BC and UK organizations that re-wired the thinking about recidivism. Typically, about 85% of former prisoners return to jail for offences committed upon release. Drawing on prisoner per diems, these groups showed that it was more cost-effective to invest in programs that help ex-convicts re-establish themselves than on incarceration. They proposed that the funding for such programs come from savings to prison budgets. They established a virtuous circle, with a financial incentive for prevention strategy with social benefits.

The same logic underwrote one of the most innovative experiments in social policy to have emerged in Canada in recent years: Housing First. In 2008, the federal government provided the Mental Health Commission of Canada with $110 million to run a multi-city pilot that examined how outlays on the costs associated with homelessness – shelters, law enforcement, etc. – compare to the funding required to provide permanent supportive housing for homeless individuals. Subsequent research showed that each dollar spent on such housing saved $2 dollars in downstream costs – both direct and indirect – associated with homelessness.

While these examples of social innovation reveal the crucial importance of finding new ways to unpack old problems, the question of finding fresh sources of funding or investment to underwrite such initiatives or other socially-minded, non-commercial activities increasingly dominates contemporary debates about how to use philanthropy policy to spur more and better social impact.

Toronto charity lawyer Linda Godel, a partner at Torkin Manes, points out that Canada is almost a decade behind the US and the UK when it comes to the introduction of new legal frameworks that create entities that operate in that limbo between charities and non-profits, on one hand, and private for-profit enterprises on the other. The UK government in 2014 enacted measures allowing certain limited liability organizations to receive 30 percent tax breaks if they used their capital for social investments.

In the world of entrepreneurial start-ups, seed funding is important, but angel and venture investors also understand the importance of so-called "patient" capital: many successful tech firms have early backers who know better than to agitate for immediate revenues and profits; their investment horizons may stretch out as far as a decade. Indeed, tech investors prefer to underwrite firms led by innovation-minded founders who build companies by bootstrapping, experimentation, and making small course-corrections as they learn from mistakes. Geoff Kistruck, the Ron Binns Chair of Entrepreneurship at York University's Schulich School of Management, says: "If you want to spur innovation, you need to provide slack."

Rahul Bhardwaj, the former president of the Toronto Foundation, says as a funder, his group looked to back projects that were experimental and approached familiar issues in novel ways. While applicants were expected to measure a project's outcomes against a range of social impact metrics, Bhardwaj also looked for organizations that understood how to adapt their projects if they'd missed a target, or scale them if they'd hit on something that worked. "Sometimes you have to suspend the fetish for outcomes," he says. "You never know if what you're doing will work 25 or 50 years from now."

Linda Godel is optimistic about the prospect for more innovation in the non-profit world in the years to come. She, like others, points out that idealistic millennials are flocking to the non-profit sector, often with plans to set up their own non-profits or socially-minded businesses that aren't burdened by the traditional or risk-averse ways of long-established charity boards.

As happens with large institutional backers of small start-ups, Bhardwaj says, policymakers would be well-advised to offer the next generation of social innovators a modest financial jumpstart and a policy framework that provides them with the time to incubate their ideas. But if our governments truly want socially innovative ideas to surface, he adds, they should then "fade into the background."

ENDOWMENTS

Retire the Term Perpetuity

“Is perpetuity 21 years?” asked a charity colleague. “No, it’s forever, until the end of time, or as long as we collectively exist,” I answered. Despite my pedantic response, the question is a good one because it underscores the inherent meaninglessness of the phrase “in perpetuity” in relation to charitable endowments.

My colleague’s charity was reviewing its endowment policy and having an internal debate about the term of funds. One opinion within the charity was perpetuity must be tied to the 21-year capital disposition rule for trusts. But this view forgets that registered charities are tax exempt and, in common law, charitable trusts are allowed to exist forever.

Endowment History

An endowment is a long-term charitable fund where the capital is invested to produce an annual payout to use for charitable purposes. The roots of endowments are in trust law. A trust is a legal arrangement that appoints a trustee to manage property that provides support to a beneficiary. Early charitable trusts held land that produced income, primarily for religious or educational institutions.

Trust law put a limit on the term of trusts to a generation, or 21 years, which is known as the “rule against perpetuities”. Charitable trusts, due to the public benefit purpose, were exempt from the rule against perpetuities. The concept of charitable trusts, out of which the modern endowment grew, is intertwined with perpetuity. They were meant to exist forever. A few rare examples date back to the 13th century.

The term endowment is a more recent creation. It emerged in the U.S. and was embraced by universities and foundations.

Initially, an endowment was land based, then invested in bonds, and starting in the 1960s, in a balanced portfolio of bonds and stocks. Gradually, the idea of only distributing income was replaced with distributing a fixed annual payout that could include capital gains. But the underlying goal remained perpetuity.

The question is how realistic is that goal? Is the classical endowment an inefficient use of scarce resources? Will capital naturally erode over a long time? Does every charity need an endowment?

There is a famous answer to these questions. The Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, the largest private foundation in the world, has committed to spend down its funds to provide maximum public benefit over 50 years.

Looser Rules for Endowments

There has been a lot of change to charitable endowments in Canada since the financial crisis of 2008/09. The crisis shook the concept of protecting capital “in perpetuity” at the expense of current charitable programs.

In 2010, the disbursement quota for registered charities in the Income Tax Act was revised to eliminate the trust-based concept of the “ten-year gift”, which forbade spending endowment capital for the first ten years. The Act now provides charities with the flexibility to define the terms of long-term funds. The charitable sector has responded by loosening capital restrictions and introducing flexible structures, such as spend-down funds.

I have worked for increased flexibility of charitable funds through Aqueduct Foundation, a public foundation with donor advised funds founded in 2006. Since inception, Aqueduct has offered a range of charitable options from flexible endowments and spend-down funds to immediate distribution funds.

Less Perpetuity

Forever is a long time. More to the point, “forever” is beyond proven human ability to maintain documents and systems. Here’s a test number: 1,607 years. That takes us back to the first sack of Rome. Much has happened since then, and, of course, perpetuity is even longer.

The point of this reductio ad absurdum argument is to make a plea for realism and caution in the use of “in perpetuity” when drafting wills, estate donations and endowment funds. Especially in estate planning, perpetuity is an emotionally powerful but intellectually incoherent concept. At heart, the notion of “in perpetuity” creates unrealistic expectations for the donor and imposes unhelpful restrictions on the charity. Ultimately it puts charitable capital at risk by saving it for an unreachable future.

Canadian charities are now using the term “perpetual” less often. This is wise. Without reducing the importance of long-term endowments as a funding structure, abandoning the concept of perpetuity increases the effective uses of charitable funds. There are, however, still charities that include the concept of “perpetuity” in endowment agreements and marketing.

Charities still need endowments, but they shouldn’t be wrapped up in often self-imposed restrictions that will limit the delivery of their mission. It’s time to retire the term perpetuity.

BUDGET 2017

Nicole K. D'Aoust
Miller Thomson LLP

Ecologically Sensitive Land Gifts

Introduction

The 2017 federal Budget was relatively thin compared to the 2016 federal budget, and did not contain significant tax changes across any sectors. The Budget contained only a few small changes that will affect charities. The proposed changes primarily include new rules added to the existing regime for gifts of ecologically sensitive land.

Background

Under the existing regime for gifts of ecologically sensitive land ("ESL"), donors of ESL are exempt from capital gains tax on the gift and are entitled to claim a tax credit (individuals) or a tax deduction (corporations) for the eligible amount of the gift, up to 100% of their income. These tax benefits may be carried forward for a period of up to 10 years. In order to obtain these tax benefits, the ESL must be certified by the Minister of Environment and Climate Change Canada ("ECCC") as land that is "ecologically sensitive" and that is important to conserve and protect as part of Canada's environmental heritage. The Minister of ECCC must also approve transfers of ESL to charities and certify the fair market value ("FMV") of the land.

Budget 2017 contained the following three proposals to amend the existing regime: (1) the imposition of a new tax in certain situations where ESL is transferred between organizations; (2) a prohibition on the receipt of gifts of ESL by private foundations; and (3) new measures to encourage more gifts of ESL in Québec. It is proposed that each of these measures will apply to gifts that occur on or after March 22, 2017.

(a) New Measures to Protect Future Use

Under the Income Tax Act (Canada) (the "Act"), where a charity, municipality in Canada or municipal or public body performing a function of government in Canada (the "Donee") receives a gift of ESL and, without consent from the Minister of ECCC, either: (i) disposes of the ESL; or (ii) changes the use of the ESL, the Donee is subject to a tax equal to 50% of the FMV of the ESL. The measures proposed in the Budget extend the 50% tax beyond situations where a Donee receives a donation of ESL to situations where a Donee subsequently sells the ESL to a third party. More specifically, the Budget proposed that a tax equal to 50% of the FMV of the ESL will be imposed on a purchaser of ESL where the purchaser, without consent from the Minister of ECCC, either: (i) disposes of the ESL; or (ii) changes the use of the ESL. This tax is designed to protect and preserve ESL from future changes in use.

The Minister of ECCC's ability to determine whether proposed changes to the use of land would degrade conservation protections have not yet been clarified.

Additionally, the Budget proposed to amend the approval process for certain recipients of ESL. Currently, where the recipient is a registered charity, the Minister of ECCC must approve the charity as an eligible recipient of ESL on a gift-by-gift basis. However, municipalities and municipal and public bodies performing a function of government are automatically eligible to receive gifts of ESL. The Budget proposed to eliminate the automatic approval of municipalities and municipal and public bodies performing a function of government as eligible recipients of ESL and subject these entities to approval on a gift-by-gift basis.

(b) Private Foundations Excluded from Gift Regime

The Budget proposed to prohibit private foundation from receiving gifts of ESL. As the Budget explains, the ability of private foundations to receive such gifts gives rise to potential conflicts of interest.

(c) Gifts of ESL in Québec

Servitudes are the subjection of real property to an easement. Pursuant to Québec civil law, both real and personal servitudes can exist. A real servitude exists where a charge on land grants the rights of dominant property over the rights of servient property. A personal servitude exists where a charge on land grants rights in property to a particular person. Under the current ESL regime, only real servitudes may be donated, since personal servitudes cannot run in perpetuity. Since the conditions for real servitude can be difficult to meet, Budget 2017 proposed to amend the Act to allow donations of personal servitudes to qualify as gifts of ESL. The Budget stated that qualifying donations will be required to meet a number of conditions, including a requirement that the personal servitude run for at least 100 years.

Conclusion

The reasons given in the Budget for adding to the existing regime for gifts of ESL include the desire to preserve Canada's environmental heritage and encourage more donations of ESL, while avoiding conflicts of interest. As indicated in the Budget, this measure is intended "to ensure that recipients of 'eco-gifts' are focused on the long-term protection of ecologically sensitive land."

PROFILE

A Place of Wildlife Respite

Wildlife Rescue was formed in 1979 with two goals in mind: rehabilitate wildlife affected by human activity, and provide education to the public on co-existing with urban wildlife. For 37 years the team has accomplished these goals, and will continue to do so for the foreseeable future.

As of this year Wildlife Rescue achieved an incredible milestone – it admitted its 100,000th patient. This makes the organization the busiest wildlife centre in Canadian history.

One such animal came on a wet Thursday morning in November, 2016. Wildlife Rescue received a call about a trumpeter swan which crashed down onto a construction site in Vancouver the night before. The young swan was trapped in a six-metre pit slowly filling with rain water. The steep sides of the pit made it impossible for the swan to gain the lift it needed for takeoff. It didn't look good.

The construction team spent hours trying to drain the pit, but they needed professional help.

After Wildlife Rescue received the call, the experienced rescue team rushed out, descended into the pit, and carefully extracted the bird, preventing any further injuries.

It was taken to the wildlife hospital and from there it received the care it needed to fully recover and return back to the wild.

This is just one of thousands of stories Wildlife Rescue sees every year. The organization now admits an average of 5,000 animals per year – far more than the 1,500 the main hospital facility was originally designed for in 1987.

Animals being cared for range from large to small, bird to mammal, including but not limited to: northern flickers, hummingbirds, bats, skunks, rabbits, herons, lizards and reptiles, and more. Wildlife Rescue provides care to these creatures throughout the year no matter the weather.

Yet care is only one side of the coin.

Thanks to a generous In Memory Donation, the donor of which wishes to remain anonymous for the time being, Wildlife Rescue is going to build the first Wildlife Learning Centre on the south shores of Burnaby Lake, British Columbia, nestled into the hospital grounds itself.

This is an incredible opportunity for Wildlife Rescue as it will have a dedicated public centre to not only admit animal patients and expand the helpline, but have a classroom space and interpretive centre to educate the public on wildlife.

This gift is going to have a lasting impact as it will be used to directly educate the next generation of the importance of natural wildlife, how to care and co-exist with it, enhancing their care and understanding of nature, and building a better future which includes the safety of all wildlife.

It's a momentous time in Wildlife Rescue history. The organization is taking in more animals than ever before, expanding its educational outreach because of the kindness of one amazing donor, and the grounds are rife to follow suit.

The organization is situated next to Burnaby Lake with room to grow, which fits into its plans to expand its care program to properly manage the caseload it currently sees and will see in the future.

The entire Metro Vancouver region is only

Sam Smith

going to continue to grow. Increased population means more construction, which means more industry, business, restaurants, entertainment – everything that comes with people. This also means the impact on local wildlife will expand, putting these furry and feathered neighbours in considerable danger.

Wildlife Rescue is preparing for this. Working together Wildlife Rescue aims to be able to protect local wildlife and leave a legacy Canadians can be proud of for the next generation.

With the public's help, the organization will be here for 37 more years providing a place of comfort and healing to injured and orphaned wildlife, and educating all about wildlife.

As a non-profit organization, Wildlife Rescue relies on the generosity of its donors. Those who care for wildlife can help by contributing to the organization directly, ensuring the ongoing rescue, rehabilitation and return of wildlife to their natural environment is able to continue in the future.

It's been a labour of love since the organization first opened its doors in 1979 with a group of five volunteers. It's taken thousands and thousands of hours of work, passion, creativity, focus, and above all the care that we as human beings carry with us towards the creatures around us to bring Wildlife Rescue to where it is today.

For wildlife, it's worth it.

When clients plan engagement parties, weddings, baby showers or divorce parties (yes, divorce parties are becoming increasingly common) they may not think to invite their estate lawyer. Understandable. However, the unfortunate result may be that such life events impact estate planning in an undesirable way or even revoke estate plans completely.

We recently encountered such a situation with a long-term client. Our client met someone and was married within a short time-span without realizing that the act of marriage revoked the rather well-thought out Wills he had in place. Although he did not think to alert us of his nuptials, we learned of the wedding second-hand. Fortunately, we were able to make swift arrangements for updated Wills and powers of attorney so that our client could rest assured that his Wills reflect his true and current intentions.

By way of a reminder, the following life events may impact estate planning:

Marriage: The act of marriage serves to revoke all Wills both spouses had in place prior to their marriage. As a result, if no new Will is made after a marriage, a new married spouse will become entitled to the deceased married spouse's estate under Ontario's intestacy laws. [This is subject to a portion of the deceased married spouse's estate being allocable to his or her children.] There is one exception to this rule. Specifically, where a person who is about to be married makes a Will that is expressly stated to be "in contemplation of their marriage" to his or her future spouse, then the act of marriage will not serve to revoke such a Will.

Separation: Generally, being separated but not legally divorced has no impact on a separated spouse's entitlements under a Will nor pursuant to a beneficiary designation done in respect of assets where you can make a designation, such as a life insurance policy, RRSP or RRIF. If the separated couple has a separation agreement in place, the terms of such agreement should be reviewed prior to changing beneficiary designations. Furthermore, separation does not revoke prior appointments of separated spouses as executors, trustees or attorneys for personal care or property.

Divorce: The law does not presume that a Will was revoked by reason of divorce. However, getting divorced will revoke any gift in a Will left to the former spouse. The Will is construed as though the former spouse pre-deceased the testator or testatrix. The effect of this rule of interpretation is that the former spouse will not be able to act as the executor and trustee, even if he or she was named in the Will. In contrast, divorce does not have the effect of revoking a prior appointment of a spouse as an attorney for personal care or property. Finally, as with separation, divorce does not revoke beneficiary designations in respect of assets such as a life insurance policy, RRSP or RRIF.

There are a number of misconceptions about what constitutes a separation or divorce. It is important to understand the difference, because as noted above, the estate planning implications that arise from a separation or divorce are different.

Spouses are considered "separated" under Ontario's Family Law Act when they live separate and apart with no reasonable prospect that they will resume cohabitation. Separated spouses may still live in the same home, so long as they live independent lives. While separated spouses may not remarry, they may enter into a separation agreement and have new relationships. It is very common that a couple may not wish to enter into the formal process of a court-ordered divorce, so they will break up and reduce the end of their relationship to a written separation agreement. A "divorce" is different in that it is a legal, court process that ends the marriage and allows the former spouses to remarry. A divorce requires the breakdown of marriage, and a court will only grant a divorce if it is satisfied that there is no possibility of reconciliation.

Life can become very hectic and it is easy to see how one may not consider the impact of certain events on a Will or estate plan during such times. Even the most sophisticated clients may not think to update their estate lawyers on the changes in their life circumstances. This is why it is important for estate lawyers to keep in touch with clients, and vice versa. Lawyers who stay familiar with their clients can remind clients to update Wills, powers of attorneys and beneficiary designations to ensure that estate planning reflects clients' true intentions.

TAX BASICS

Provincial Differences

Adam Aptowitzer
Drache Aptowitzer LLP

Lawyers and advisors in the charitable sector often discuss high level tax topics in articles and seminars - but, for many, tax remains a dark and mystical art. Indeed, even those who once professed an understanding of the system may, over time, lose touch with the basics if they do not remain current on developments. This is a somewhat reasonable reaction to the complexity of anything tax related, but ostriches do not have a good track record at avoiding difficulties. A donor's reason to understand the tax implications of a donation are clear but even charities interested in attracting donations need a thorough understanding of their tax implications.

Fundamentally, there are two major types of tax differences between the Provinces. The first are the actual tax brackets and the second are the tax rates.

A tax bracket is the level of income to which specific percentages are applied to determine tax owing. Each Province has its own determination of how to break up income and the number of these breaks range from three to five. Income is typically taxed on a progressive level so that if a taxpayer's total income falls in the third bracket he or she would pay the maximum tax in the first two brackets and the applicable tax rate is then only applied to the difference. The same procedure is followed in the Federal level, which has its own tax brackets that may or may not coincide with a given Province. These rates are usually (although not everywhere) given a cost of living adjustment every year. An example of how the Federal and Provincial rates brackets work is below, using a hypothetical illustration.

Example 1

Bracket Number	Federal Income Level	Provincial Income Level
1	0 - $30,000	0 - $35,000
2	$30,001 - $75,000	$35,001 - $65,000
3	Over $75,000	Over $65,000

Example 2a

Bracket Number	Federal Income Level	Federal Tax Rate	Provincial Income Level	Provincial Tax Rate
1	0 - $30,000	0 %	0 - $35,000	0 %
2	$30,001 - $75,000	15%	$35,001 - $65,000	9 %
3	Over $75,000	20 %	Over $65,000	11 %

Example 2b

Bracket Number	Federal Income Level	Federal Tax Rate	Tax Owing	Provincial Income Level	Provincial Tax Rate	Tax Owing
1	0 - $30,000	0 %	$0	0 - $35,000	0 %	$0
2	$30,001 - $75,000	15%	$6750	$35,001 - $65,000	9 %	$2700
3	Over $75,000	20 %	$1000	Over $65,000	11 %	$1650
Total			$7750			$4350

The second area of difference relates to the difference in tax rates charged. For the most part their application is fairly simple except that Ontario and PEI have surtaxes as well. In these cases, the taxpayer calculates her taxes owing and if the calculation is greater than the threshold amount she multiplies the total taxes in that bracket by the surtax rate. Effectively, this has one going through the same mathematical exercise with the results of the first set of calculations.

Taking our previous example and assigning tax rates to them. See Example 2a

Then somebody with taxable income in the year of $80,000 would pay the following amounts of tax. See Example 2b

To this we would apply surtaxes (on the Provincial tax of $4350) like this:

Provincial Surtax Level	Provincial Surtax Rate	Tax Payable
0 - $1,999	0 %	$0
$2,000 - $3,000	20%	$200
Over $3,000	36 %	$486
Total		$686

The total tax owing then is $7,750 in Federal taxes, $4,350 in Provincial tax, and $686 in Provincial surtax for a grand total of $12,786.

Charitable contributions work to offset the taxes owing. So in a situation where a person earns a dollar and then donates that dollar (ignoring for the purposes of this example the effect of source deductions) the person is taxed at the appropriate rate and then deducts from that tax the relevant amount of the credit. That credit amount is determined as follows.

For the first $200 of donations in the year the taxpayer is entitled to a credit at the lowest Federal and Provincial rates. In our example above it would be 15% Federally and 9 % Provincially. Effectively what this means is that the governments are foregoing their share of tax for the benefit of the charity. Where the donor gives more than $200 the actual tax rate Federally and for most of the Provinces is the highest tax rate (although in some Provinces it is the second highest rate). Where it is the highest rate the relevant government is again foregoing the tax due to it in favour of the charity. In those Provinces where it is the second highest rate the donor is out of pocket the donation plus some additional amount of tax that the Province does not forego.

Obviously, in those Provinces with a surtax the credit works to reduce the amount of tax and then, indirectly, the amount of surtax.

These basics are important to understand the effect of donations, not only of cash, but of publicly traded securities, environmental property, cultural property and many of the other technical aspects of donations. With an understanding of these fundamentals, both donors and charities will be in a better position to navigate the tax minefield of charitable giving

Adam Aptowitzer is a lawyer at Drache Aptowitzer LLP in Ottawa, Ontario

An estate can carry back a capital loss realized in its first year and deduct it from gains in the terminal return. The estate will file an amended terminal return or an amended return for the prior year, if a donation credit is carried back. This could affect the interest that is refunded as a result of the overpayment in the terminal return or the year prior to death.

- Government departments and agencies
- Public schools and their boards
- Professional and industrial associations
- Community service clubs

Additionally, where there are many local, regional and national bodies related in some way and/or are all concerned with the same work, local organizations have generally not been included separately. “The act of philanthropy is a spiritual act, an expression of caring for one’s fellow human beings. It is a belief in the future and that the future can be good. It is investing in that future. It is helping to make the dream come true.”

But : Depuis 1918, l'Association des Amputés de guerre répond aux besoins des anciens combattants amputés et, aujourd'hui encore, elle continue d'être à leur service, tout en aidant d'autres personnes amputées, parmi lesquelles on compte des enfants. Le Programme LES VAINQUEURS offre aux enfants amputés une aide financière pour l'achat de membres artificiels, des séminaires régionaux et du soutien entre pairs. Vous pouvez aider l'association à perpétuer sa tradition « les amputés s'entraident » en lui faisant un don testamentaire. Ainsi, elle poursuivra encore longtemps son œuvre auprès des personnes amputées, y compris des enfants. L'Association des Amputés de guerre peut offrir ses divers programmes grâce aux dons du public. Elle ne reçoit aucune subvention gouvernementale.

A gift in your will...

...brings hope to the next generation.

Did you know that arthritis is the leading cause of disability in Canada?

In fact, 4.6 million Canadians live with arthritis. It can devastate a promising career, destroy a child's eyesight and deplete a person's independence.

As Canada's principal health charity devoted exclusively to funding arthritis research and providing education, programs and patient care, The Arthritis Society is a dedicated advocate for the men, women and children who live with this disease.

The support we receive from individuals and other partners allows us to lead the way as the largest non-government funder of arthritis research in Canada by investing more than $185 million in projects that have led to breakthroughs in the diagnosis, treatment and care of people with arthritis.

With generous support through a gift in your will, or a gift of life insurance, a charitable gift annuity, or a gift of securities, you will support the next generation in their fight to end arthritis.

Your gift means new discoveries, hope for tomorrow, and a cure.

You can help give a lifetime of sanctuary.

Donkeys are the 'forgotten equine' – gentle animals who serve quietly and are too often mistreated or abandoned. Your legacy can give them the forever home and care they deserve. To make a bequest, please call 519.836.1697 or email info@thedonkeysanctuary.ca.

Purpose: Food For The Poor Canada works with communities across the Caribbean and Latin America, with a focus on Haiti and Jamaica. We are an interdenominational Christian organization that provides basic aid and sustainable development, empowering communities through five areas of programming: food, housing, education, health and livelihood. Food For The Poor Canada partners with a strong network of NGOs, government, churches and community leaders to distribute aid where it is needed the most and to strengthen the development of infrastructure in high-needs communities. We help create prosperous communities where children and their families have what they need to flourish.

It's a Start.

Let's say this charity is listed in Canadian Donor's Guide, Canada's only comprehensive directory of fundraising organizations... a book that goes to an audience specifically selected for their involvement in major donations and planned giving... a reference book they use throughout the year as a source of information.

Great exposure. But where's the information? Who are they? What do they do? What have they achieved? Who is the person to contact?

Next time consider a Descriptive Listing

Your potential donors need to know.

Le don planifié, un don pour l'espoir

Planifier un don en faveur de la Société de recherche sur le cancer c'est poser un geste de générosité en soutenant une cause qui touche chacun d'entre nous.

Un don planifié vous permet d'établir la façon la plus appropriée de donner à la Société de recherche sur le cancer, et ce, sans atténuer votre niveau de vie habituel et celui de vos proches.

Voici quelques-unes des nombreuses possibilités qui s'offrent à vous afin d'appuyer le financement de la recherche sur le cancer :

- Le don testamentaire
- Le don de valeurs mobilières
- Le don de produits d'assurance-vie

Nous pouvons vous aider à planifier votre don. Communiquez avec notre service des dons majeurs et planifiés afin de connaître les avantages reliés à la planification d'un don à la Société de recherche sur le cancer.

We are helping to end homelessness in Greater Victoria.

Your clients can help make it happen through a bequest or living gift.

John

In 2010, John was diagnosed with a mental illness that made it impossible for him to continue his sales career. Instead he lost his family and home.

Today, John lives at Cool Aid's Swift House and gets the help he needs to stay healthy.

Purpose: Since 1918, The War Amps has met the needs of war amputees. Today, the Association continues to serve them, and all Canadian amputees, including children. The Child Amputee (CHAMP) Program provides financial assistance for artificial limbs, regional seminars and peer support. You can continue the legacy of "amputees helping amputees" with a charitable bequest or gift in your will. With your help, The War Amps will continue to meet its commitments to children – and all amputees – long into the future. The War Amps is able to operate its many programs through donations from the public. The Association does not receive government grants.

Leave a Lasting Gift for Child Amputees

A charitable bequest or gift in your will honours the legacy of war amputees and changes the lives of child amputees for the better.

“My uncle was a very special man with a generous heart and he couldn't think of a worthier cause than helping child amputees. He knew you would use this money well to bring smiles to children's faces and make their challenges easier.”

Supporting community... For Good. Forever.

Eleanor Suderman and Barry Garbutt have seen first-hand how people at both ends of life's spectrum need help. That's why they've included an estate gift in their Will that ensures Winnipeg kids get a great start in life and local seniors have adequate care in their later years.

Whether you want to support our community's changing needs, an area close to your heart, your favourite charity, or a combination, The Winnipeg Foundation can help. Since gifts to The Foundation are endowed, support will continue forever.

When you give to The Winnipeg Foundation, you're joining Eleanor Suderman and Barry Garbutt, and the hundreds of donors who support our community
For Good. Forever.

Purpose: The Yonge Street Mission is a not-for-profit, Christian faith community that intentionally fosters transformation in the lives of individuals, families, and communities in Toronto that are most seriously affected by poverty. For over 120 years, The Yonge Street Mission has assisted in providing basic needs and tangible support. Primarily serving the areas of Regent Park, Moss Park and St. James Town, our programs and services receive over 180,000 visits a year and offer food security, housing, health care, employment training, counselling and much more. "Changing lives. Building Communities. Transforming Toronto." This phrase encapsulates our goal to eradicate poverty in Toronto in one generation. Now, more than ever, we must continue to join hands in order to help those in need move from surviving to thriving!

"love for mankind." It was never meant to apply only to donors of thousands or millions of dollars."*
