Meaningful Contributions

The purpose of the Canadian Donor's Guide remains the same as it always has been: to provide an authoritative annual directory to fundraising organizations in Canada. This year we celebrate the 31st anniversary of the Guide's publication, the last 15 years under the ownership of our family business, Third Sector Publishing, based in Orillia, Ontario.

Scotia Private Client Group is back for a 13th year as the Guide's sponsor. This means we continue to deliver over 17,000 copies of our publication to key decision makers and professional advisors in Canada's donor community.

The Canadian Donor's Guide is also published with the co-operation of the Canadian Association of Gift Planners (CAGP), the Canadian Bar Association, and Imagine Canada. We are grateful for the support of the above, as well as for the support of the numerous charities across Canada that pay for descriptive listings or display advertising. Together, they make it possible to publish the Canadian Donor's Guide.

Thank you.

We continue to feature an expanded Editorial Section. We also offer a Digital Edition of the Canadian Donor's Guide 2016-17. This is an exact replica of the print version of the Guide that you have in front of you. You view it on a computer screen by accessing it on the Internet via our website at www.donorsguide.ca.

We feature a strong lineup of contributors to this year's Editorial Section, as we have for a number of years. Significant measures introduced in the 2014 and 2015 federal budgets, as well as a reversal in the 2016 budget of one of the 2015 measures, make their insights particularly important.

The reversal is the decision of the new Liberal government in Ottawa to nullify the 2015 budget proposal to eliminate capital gains tax that may be payable by donors who make gifts of the proceeds of the sale of real estate or private company shares to charity. Donald K. Johnson, who has been a tireless advocate for this initiative for a number of years, makes a cogent argument for a reconsideration of this decision in an opinion piece on page 8.

The 2014 budget brought in the Graduated Rate Estate (GRE). The GRE is a major change to the tax treatment of charitable gifts that are donated via an estate following the death of the donor. The GRE took effect this year. Elena Hoffstein again provides an overview of the legislation, beginning on page 28.

Charity law in Canada is complex, largely because the regulation of charities has, over time, become entwined in this country's voluminous Income Tax Act. It is quite understandable to assume no elected Member of Parliament, or a provincial assembly, unless he or she was a tax expert before entering politics, grasps the complexities of the Income Tax Act; and therefore understands the constraints faced by registered charities and other non-profit organizations.

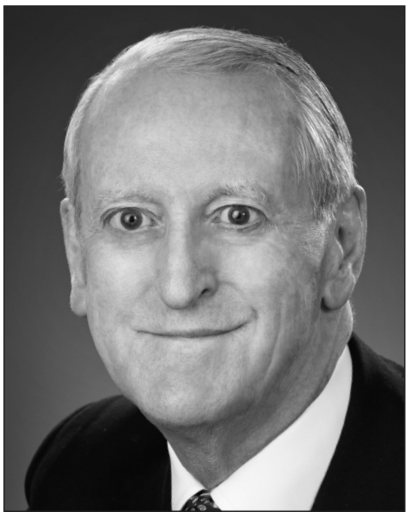

There continue to be well-founded pleas for reform of the legislative framework that hems in the work of charities and other non-profit entities in Canada. Why does Canada have to lag in this regard? Canadians do often require a nudge. One thought: something that is sometimes necessary in Canada to affect substantial change – a Royal Commission on the Reform of Charity Regulation in Canada. At the very least, our government in Ottawa should heed the plea of The Muttart Foundation, found on page 19, asking that Statistics Canada be allowed to reinstate studies that provide important data regarding the scope and impact of Canada's non-profit sector.

Nevertheless, it is important to recognize that Canadian charities and their donors enjoy a more generous tax treatment system than what is found in many other first-world countries. Helping us once again to understand these tax benefits, and to unravel some of the mystery of our tax code as it relates to charitable giving, is Jim Parks, a senior lawyer in the field; his Summary of Tax Considerations begins on page 9.

For charity employees and volunteers, Mark Blumberg boils down to ten some key compliance issues on which they should focus, starting on page 30.

It is always inspiring to read about individuals who benefit from or contribute in a meaningful way to charity. This edition we have a Profile, provided by The Terry Fox Foundation (page 18), as well as two articles highlighting the roles played by charitable organizations and community volunteers who are at the heart of Canada's response to the Syrian Refugee Crisis (pages 21 and 22). The common thread that runs through all three: meaningful contributions are the result of lives lived with a meaningful sense of purpose.

BUDGET 2016

Donald K. Johnson
BMO Capital Markets

Bring Back 2015 Incentives

The removal of the capital gains tax on gifts of listed securities in 2006 has been an enormous success. Charities have received over $1 billion in gifts of stock virtually every year since 2006. Prior to 1997, when the capital gains tax was reduced by 50% on such gifts, virtually no one gave stock to charities in Canada, because they did not want to pay a tax on their gift.

The 2015 Federal Budget, introduced by the then Conservative government, included a measure that, beginning in 2017, when private company shares or real estate are sold to an arms-length party, and the cash proceeds from the disposition are donated to a registered charity within 30 days, the donor is exempt from the capital gains tax on the disposition. This measure provided the same tax treatment for donations of these appreciated capital assets as currently applies to gifts of listed securities. Importantly, the measure had the support of the Liberals and the NDP. However, it was not included in the Budget Bill, because the legislation documents had not been drafted. Naturally, all stakeholders in the not-for-profit sector expected the measure to be included in the 2016 Budget. These include hospitals, universities, social service agencies and arts and culture organizations that would benefit from an estimated additional $200 million per annum in charitable donations. Many charities have been communicating with potential donors that have significant assets in the form of private company shares and/or real estate so they could donate to their communities in 2017.

The 2016 Budget, introduced by the new Liberal government, surprised many stakeholders in the not-for-profit sector because the government announced it would not proceed with this measure. MPs should consult with the managements, boards of directors and philanthropists in each Constituency to obtain the benefit of their perspective on this important public policy issue. There are many compelling reasons why the Liberals should reconsider:

The demand for services provided by our not-for-profit organizations continues to grow, particularly for healthcare, as our population ages, while Federal and Provincial Governments have limited financial capacity to provide this increased funding. The private sector can help fill this gap. Charitable donations are much more tax effective than direct Government spending.

This measure would remove an inequity in the current tax system. An entrepreneur who takes his or her Company public and donates shares to a registered charity is exempt from capital gains tax on his or her gift. Entrepreneurs who decide to keep their companies private do not receive the same treatment. There are 109,000 members of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business (CFIB) and they are all private organizations.

There should be no concern about valuation abuse because owners must sell their assets to arms-length parties, which ensures that they are receiving fair market value for the sale of these assets.

Our hospitals and universities compete with U.S. counterparts to attract and retain the best doctors, professors and researchers. Charitable donations often play a key role in providing funding for these talented people. In the United States, gifts of appreciated capital property are exempt from capital gains taxes. These include listed securities, private company shares and real estate. This measure would level the playing field with our U.S. counterparts for charitable fundraising. Removal of this barrier to charitable giving would also help Canadians to donate more, as our per capita donations are one half those given by Americans.

The fiscal cost of this measure would not be material given the projected $29.4 billion deficit. The foregone capital gains tax on the incremental $200 million of charitable donations is estimated to be only $50 to $60 million per annum. The fiscal cost of the Charitable Donation Tax Credit would be the same as for cash donations, about $58 to $66 million per annum.

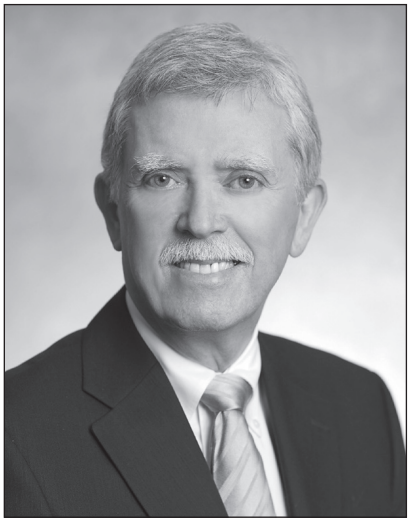

It is estimated that 90%-95% of the donations of these assets would be incremental and only 5-10% a substitution for cash donations. One catalyst for this type of major donation would be when the owner of a private company decides to retire and sell his or her business.

After consulting with people involved with not-for-profit organizations in each Constituency, all MPs should discuss this issue in upcoming Caucus meetings. All stakeholders in the not-for-profit sector strongly recommend that the new Liberal Government give consideration to implementing this important measure in the 2017 budget. Millions of Canadians would directly benefit from the improvement in the vital services that they would receive from the dramatic increase in charitable giving, and they would all be very grateful.

Donald K. Johnson, Volunteer board member of four not-for-profit organizations in each area of the charitable sector and a member of the Advisory Board of BMO Capital Markets

CHARITABLE DONATIONS

A Summary of Tax Considerations

James M. Parks
Gardiner Roberts, LLP

OVERVIEW

Tax consequences are an important factor in structuring charitable gifts. Proper planning can increase the benefits to the donor, which are often a major incentive for charitable giving. A gift to a registered charity by an individual (including a trust) entitles the donor to a deduction in computing tax otherwise payable, whereas a gift by a corporation entitles it to a deduction in computing taxable income, as opposed to a tax credit. These rules are found in section 118.1 of the Income Tax Act (the "ITA") for gifts by individuals and section 110.1 of the ITA for gifts by corporations.

2016 BUDGET PROPOSALS

The March 22, 2016 federal budget proposes only a few changes dealing with charitable donations and related matters as follows:

1. A donation tax credit at the rate of 33% will be available for donations exceeding $200 for trusts and estates that are subject to tax at that rate.
2. The changes announced in the 2015 budget dealing with partnerships will proceed. Under current law, if a charity is a member of a partnership, it will be considered to be carrying on a business. The new rules will provide relief in certain circumstances.
3. Changes will be made to some rules dealing with life insurance policies owned by private corporations or partnerships, to prevent what is perceived to be improper manipulation involving the capital dividend account of the corporation or the adjusted cost base of the partnership interest on receipt of a death benefit.
4. Changes will be made with respect to some transfers of life insurance policies to prevent taxpayers from extracting, without tax, the excess of the fair market value over the cash surrender value in certain situations.
5. Relief from GST/HST compliance will be available for charities that receive donations under the split-receipting rules and give a form of inducement to the donor.

The proposals in the 2015 budget dealing with donations of cash proceeds from sales of real estate or shares of private corporations will not proceed. There will be further consultation dealing with the rules relating to political activities and an effort by CRA to streamline and simplify communications.

BASIC TAX RULES

Individuals

An individual donor can claim a credit against tax otherwise payable. This summary comments on charities that are registered by Canada Revenue Agency ("CRA"), RCAAAs, certain non-profit housing corporations, Canadian municipalities, the crown, the United Nations and certain foreign charities (including certain foreign universities) and other donees. Credits or deductions are available only for gifts to "qualified donees", except as noted. The federal tax credit is calculated at the lowest personal tax rate for donations up to $200. For gifts exceeding $200, the credit is 29% of the amount of the gift. Under the 2016 budget proposals, since the maximum tax rate will increase to 33%, there will be a corresponding increase in the credit. A comparable tax credit is available in calculating provincial taxes, with special rules in Quebec. An individual can claim credit for gifts of up to 75% of net income for the year. Unused credits can be carried forward for five years and used to offset tax in those years, subject to the 75% limit. The limit does not apply in the year of death or the previous year. The 75% limit is increased by 25% of taxable capital gains realized when making a gift of appreciated capital property, and 25% of recaptured capital cost allowance on a gift of depreciable property (to a maximum of 25% of the lesser of the capital cost or the fair market value of the property).

Corporations

A corporate donor can claim a deduction in computing taxable income and is subject to the same 75% limit as individuals. It can claim a deduction of up to 75% of its net income for the year plus 25% of a taxable capital gain and 25% of recaptured capital cost allowance on a gift of depreciable property (to the same maximum mentioned above).

TYPES OF GIFTS

The following are some basic features and tax consequences of certain types of gifts.

1. Gifts by Will

Gifts made by will are "testamentary" gifts. The donor ("testator") states in a will that on death, property is to be given as a bequest or legacy to a named charity or a charity to be chosen by the executors. The gift can be cash or property, such as a work of art or shares of a corporation. If the testator leaves too much discretion to the executors in choosing a charity or the amount of the gift, CRA could allege the gift is made by the estate and not deemed to be made in the year of death.

For deaths after 2015, testamentary gifts are deemed to be made by the estate rather than by the deceased. The estate can elect to claim the credit in a deceased's year of death or the preceding year. The rules initially required a transfer of property to be completed within 36 months after death, but the Department of Finance announced in January, 2016 that it will amend the rules to provide a 60 month window. For deaths before 2016, the testator was deemed to have made the gift immediately before death and a tax credit was available in the terminal return, or prior year unused credits could be carried back and used to reduce tax in the prior year. The credit can offset 100% of net income for the year of death and the prior year. This credit can be useful in calculating tax in the year of death, since the deceased is deemed to have disposed of capital assets immediately before death (subject to certain exceptions, such as for spousal rollovers) at fair market value, realizing capital gains in that year.

Under the new rules, for deaths after 2016, a gift made by will or as a designation under a life insurance policy, RRSP, RRIF or TFSA is deemed to be made by the estate at the time when the property is transferred to the donee. To be eligible for full credits, the gift must be made by a graduated rate estate ("GRE" as discussed below) entitling the deceased to claim credit in the year of death or immediately preceding year or entitling the GRE to claim credit in the year of transfer or a preceding year of the estate (but only for gifts in the first 36 months). The property that is transferred must have been acquired by the estate as a consequence of death and if there is a direct designation, the transfer must be made as a consequence of death. The credit can be shared or allocated between the individual and the estate, but cannot be claimed twice. An estate can qualify as a GRE for up to 36 months after death, but under the recent proposals, gifts made within 60 months after death will also qualify for a credit that can be claimed by the deceased in the year of death or immediately preceding year or by the estate in the year of transfer. However, if more than 36 months have elapsed since death, the estate will not be able to claim a credit in any preceding year of the estate. If the estate is not a GRE, it can claim a credit in the year of the gift or any of the five following years.

2. Annuities

Charitable organizations can issue annuities, but charitable foundations can be deregistered if they incur ineligible debt obligations. A charity should ensure that it has legal authority to issue annuities under provincial law dealing with insurance or other relevant laws. The charity can purchase an annuity from a financial institution rather than issuing it itself, to reduce its risk of loss. The value of property received from a charity in exchange for a gift must be determined and becomes the cost of the property to the charity. Where an amount is transferred to a charity and the donor receives a stream of annuity payments, the amount of the gift will be equal to the excess of the amount transferred by the donor over the amount that would be required to purchase an annuity providing the same payments.

3. Life Insurance

A charity can benefit from gifts of life insurance policies in several ways. A gift of an insurance policy can result in a large donation, at a relatively small cost to the donor. A charity can purchase an insurance policy on the donor's life on the understanding that the donor (or some other person) will pay the premiums directly to the insurance company, or make cash gifts to the charity, so it can pay them. This is often supported by a pledge to pay the premiums. The charity can issue a tax receipt for the premiums paid. On the death of the donor, the charity will receive the death benefit, which will not be a gift by the donor. A drawback from the charity's point of view is that there may be no assurance the donor will pay the premiums. If the donor fails to pay, the charity can surrender the policy or pay the premiums using its own funds.

Alternatively, the donor can transfer an existing policy to the charity and agree to pay future premiums. The charity can issue a receipt for the fair market value of the policy, which may not necessarily be the cash surrender value (normally only whole life or universal life policies will have a value) less any outstanding policy loans. The charity can issue a tax receipt for premiums paid. If a qualified valuator determines that the fair market value of the policy exceeds its cash surrender value (less any outstanding policy loans), the higher amount should be the eligible amount in the receipt issued by the charity. The donor will be subject to tax on the amount by which the cash surrender value (less any outstanding policy loans) exceeds the adjusted cost basis (a defined term) of the policy. CRA has stated that this result is not affected by the issuance of an official receipt by the charity reflecting a fair market value that is higher than the cash surrender value.

If the charity is concerned that it will not be able to pay the premiums, the donor (or another donor) can give cash, which the charity can use to buy an annuity providing periodic payments to fund the premiums. The charity should be able to treat the annuity and policy in a way that does not cause problems in meeting its disbursement quota. Alternatively, the charity could rely on a promise from the donor (or another donor) to make annual gifts to pay the premiums. The ability to pay the premiums on a donated policy could be a factor in determining the fair market value of the policy. If the policy is likely to lapse because the charity does not pay the premiums, the fair market value could be reduced. A registered charity is not required to pay tax on its income and should not be adversely affected if a policy is not "exempt". The eligible amount of a gift of a life insurance policy will be the lesser of its fair market value and the "cost" of the policy to the donor, if the gift is made within three years after the donor acquired it.

The donor can continue to own the policy, and name the charity as the beneficiary. The donor will receive no tax relief for the premiums paid or the value of the policy, since no property is being given to the charity. Under insurance law, the donor can change the beneficiary from the charity to another person. If the charity is the named beneficiary, it will receive the death benefit on the donor's death. The donor is deemed to have made a gift to the charity immediately before death, if the charity receives the death benefit under the policy within 36 months after death. The fair market value of the gift is deemed to be the fair market value, at the time of the individual's death, of the right to that transfer. The Department of Finance has stated that "in nearly all cases" the fair market value at death of the right to transfer is "expected to be" the fair market value at death of the money that is ultimately received. A donor can use life insurance proceeds to pay a bequest in a will, naming the estate as beneficiary. On the donor's death, the estate would receive the death benefit free of tax and pay the bequest to the charity, which would issue a receipt. The credit could reduce tax in the year of death or the prior year, if there are excess credits. In some provinces, probate tax on the value of the proceeds passing through the estate may be a factor. Where life insurance proceeds are paid to an estate and used to pay a bequest, the gift will be treated as a gift by the estate, subject to an election to carry it back to the year of death.

Other arrangements may be tax-effective, such as having a private corporation purchase insurance on the life of one of the shareholders. There are techniques to take advantage of the tax-free proceeds on death, the capital dividend account of the corporation, the rules for taxation of dividends and "post-mortem" planning. Subject to a spousal rollover, capital gains are realized in the year of death. In some cases there can be "double tax" because the deceased owns shares of a corporation that owns assets with unrealized gains. Life insurance can often be used to reduce those gains or the tax, in combination with charitable donations.

In some situations, the features of the policy are shared or ownership of the policy is split. This type of planning raises a number of regulatory and tax issues and requires sophisticated advice for both the donor and the charity. Recent changes prevent arrangements designed to deduct interest on money borrowed by private corporations to buy life insurance policies and use the capital dividend account when the death benefit is paid. It also changed the treatment of some back-to-back arrangements and prescribed life annuities.

The 2016 budget proposals will ensure that life insurance proceeds received by a private corporation or a partnership do not result in an inappropriate addition to the capital dividend account (for private corporations) or the adjusted cost base (for partnerships). There will be new information-reporting requirements if a corporation or partnership is not a policyholder but is a beneficiary entitled to receive a death benefit. These changes will apply to benefits received as a result of a death occurring after March 21, 2016. Other changes will be introduced to prevent inappropriate tax benefits from arising where a life insurance policy is transferred to a private corporation or partnership on a "roll-over" basis.

These changes are designed to prevent taxpayers from removing, without tax, the excess of the fair market value of a policy that is transferred in these circumstances over its cash surrender value. This measure will apply to transfers after March 21, 2016. A similar rule will be added to reduce the amount added to the capital dividend account, paid-up capital and/or adjusted cost base if a policy had been transferred to a corporation or partnership prior to March 22, 2016.

4. Gifts of Residual Interests

A donor can give property to a charity, while retaining the right to use it for his or her lifetime. Alternatively, the donor can establish a charitable remainder trust by transferring assets to the trust, reserving a right to receive payments for life and transferring the balance in the trust on death to a charity. If certain conditions are met, CRA considers the donor has made a current gift. This type of gift could be made during a person's lifetime or by will. The value of the gift will be the fair market value of the transferred property (usually cash) less the present value of the reserved interest, taking into account an appropriate discount rate, the life expectancy of the donor, current interest rates and any other relevant factors. This type of gift is analogous to a charitable annuity. If there is a right to encroach on the capital, the value of the residual interest is considered to be nil. A trust will generally be required for gifts of property other than real estate.

CRA has stated that the gift of a beneficial interest in the capital of a charitable remainder trust is not automatically treated as a gift of a non-qualifying security, but the general anti-avoidance rule might apply if the trust owns non-qualifying securities. CRA will consider whether the trust is "affiliated" with the donor immediately after the gift was made. If the donor retains a beneficial interest in the income of the trust, the donor may be "affiliated" with the trust. Whether this is the case will be a question of fact. A trust and a person are affiliated if the person is a "majority-interest beneficiary". This includes a person who has a beneficial interest in the income of the trust if it has a fair market value that is greater than 50% of the fair market value of all beneficial interests and a person who, with an affiliated person, holds beneficial interests in the income of the trust if the fair market value of those interests is greater than 50% of the fair market value of all beneficial interests.

Prior to 2016, in some situations where the residual interest in a testamentary trust was not subject to a power to encroach on capital and it was possible to ascribe a value to it, a credit could be claimed for the value of the residual interest that passed under the will, prior to any actual transfer of property to the charity. Under the new rules, there must be an actual transfer of property and not merely entitlement to receive an amount later.

Using a charitable remainder trust or making a gift of a residual interest by will often involves reliance on administrative policies of CRA and raises a number of technical issues. The Department of Finance had at one time considered changes in the ITA dealing with charitable remainder trusts, but no amendments were ever introduced. Specific advice should be sought before this type of planning is utilized.

5. Gifts of Capital Property

A donor of capital property is deemed to have received proceeds of disposition equal to the fair market value of the property. If the fair market value exceeds the cost, a capital gain will be realized. If the property is depreciable property, recaptured capital cost allowance is included in income. A donor can reduce capital gains tax on a gift of appreciated capital property to a charity by designating the transfer price as an amount not greater than its fair market value and not less than its adjusted cost base. The donor will then be deemed to have disposed of the property for the designated amount and considered to have made a gift of the designated amount when calculating the tax credit or deduction. This enables the donor to avoid realizing a capital gain altogether, or realize only a desired amount of capital gain (for example to offset capital losses). There are restrictions for non-resident individuals disposing of Canadian real estate to a charity.

The amount to be included as a taxable capital gain is nil for gifts of securities traded on a designated stock exchange (such as shares, bonds, warrants and debentures) and mutual fund shares or units or shares or interests in certain segregated funds. It is more tax-efficient for the donor to give securities directly to a charity, rather than sell them and give the proceeds to it.

An employee who exercises a stock option is taxed on a benefit equal to the difference between the fair market value of the shares at the time of exercise and the sum of the exercise price plus the amount paid for the option. In certain circumstances, the employee can claim a deduction against the stock option benefit so only 50% of the benefit is taxable. If an employee stock option is exercised and marketable securities are given to a qualified donee in the year and within 30 days after the option is exercised and if certain other conditions are met, only one-quarter of the benefit is taxable. Individuals who make qualifying donations of marketable securities acquired through such stock options are not required to report any of the benefit.

Taxpayers who own eligible unlisted exchangeable securities can exchange them without causing tax to be payable on a gain. There is no tax on a gain on the exchange, and the donor can receive a receipt for the donation of the listed securities received on the exchange, without recognizing a gain. This beneficial treatment for capital gains on gifts of marketable securities applies to capital gains on the exchange (with some exceptions) of unlisted securities for listed securities where:

(a) at the time they were issued, the unlisted securities included a condition allowing the holder to exchange them for the listed securities;

(b) the listed securities are the only consideration received on the exchange; and

(c) the listed securities are donated within 30 days after the exchange.

There are special rules for exchangeable partnership interests. These are intended to ensure that gains attributable to a reduction in the adjusted cost base of the partnership interest are not exempt.

A gift of a "non-qualifying security" to a charity will be ignored in determining the tax deduction or credit in most cases. A non-qualifying security generally includes an obligation of the donor or a non-arm's length person, a share issued by a corporation with which the donor does not deal at arm's length or any other security issued by the individual or a non-arm's length person. There are exceptions for obligations, shares or securities listed on designated stock exchanges and deposits with financial institutions. If the property is disposed of within five years of receipt of the gift, or ceases to be a "non-qualifying security" within the five year period, the person will be treated as having made a gift at that time. This rule does not apply to an "excepted gift", which is generally a gift to an arm's length qualified donee that is not a private foundation, if the donor deals at arm's length with all of the donee's directors or trustees immediately after the gift. These rules deny a tax credit for certain types of gifts, including shares of privately held companies, subject to some relief if the donee disposes of the security within five years. The rules apply where the non-qualifying security is donated to a trust of which the registered charity is a beneficiary.

Rules dealing with "loan-back" arrangements apply where a person donates property to a charity which is not dealing at arm's length with the person and receives a loan from the charity, or is allowed to use the property donated to the charity. The fair market value of the gift is reduced for purposes of calculating the tax credit. These rules apply to certain arm's length arrangements. CRA's administrative positions on gifts of capital property are set out on its website.

Recognition of a gift is deferred until the time (within five years after the donation) when the qualified donee has disposed of the non-qualifying security for consideration that is not, to any person, another non-qualifying security. An anti-avoidance rule provides that, if as a result of a series of transactions, a particular person holds a non-qualifying security of a donor and the donee has acquired a non-qualifying security of that person or of the donor, the gift will be deferred until such time (within five years of the donation) as the donee disposes of the non-qualifying security for consideration that is not another non-qualifying security of any person.

CRA has stated that where an individual owns "thin" controlling voting shares of a private corporation, under which she is not entitled to receive dividends or to participate beyond a nominal amount on winding up, but controls the corporation, in some circumstances it will treat the shares as having more than a nominal value. A gift of those shares to a registered charity could offer flexibility in dealing with the valuation issue, particularly if an election is made to treat the amount of the gift as the adjusted cost base of the shares. However, this could raise other issues, including problems under the excess business holdings rules for private foundations and "acquisition of control" issues for charitable foundations.

6. Gifts of Art, Cultural and Ecological Property

(i) Art

Certain gifts of inventory by an artist receive special treatment. In those circumstances, where an appropriate designation is made, an artist is entitled to a credit based on the fair market value of the property but no income is triggered on the disposition.

Artwork is generally considered to be personal-use property unless it is inventory. Personal-use property is property that is used primarily for the personal use or enjoyment and includes jewellery, clothing, furniture, and certain works of art. For purposes of calculating the capital gain or loss, the adjusted cost base and proceeds of disposition of personal-use property are deemed to be at least $1,000. This rule eases the compliance and administrative burden associated with the reporting of dispositions of personal-use property. The $1,000 deemed adjusted cost base and deemed proceeds of disposition for personal-use property will not apply if the property is acquired after February 27, 2000, as part of an arrangement in which the property is given to a charity. Therefore, where this type of property with a value of less than $1,000 is donated to a charity in those circumstances, it will no longer be treated as personal-use property, and any resulting capital gain will be taxable.

(ii) Cultural Property

A gift of certified cultural property to a designated institution will not trigger a capital gain. The donor will be allowed a credit (if an individual) or a deduction (if a corporation) for the fair market value of the property and will not be limited to 75% of income. There are special rules for determining the fair market value of cultural property. In addition, any capital gain on an object that is donated is exempt from tax. The determination is made by the Canadian Cultural Property Export Review Board and there are extensive rules for the procedures to be followed and appeals if the amount determined is not acceptable to the donor. The Board must certify the property and designate the institution. Any unused credits or deductions can be carried forward for five years, or back one year in the event of death. Charities receiving gifts of cultural property are subject to a penalty tax in certain circumstances if they dispose of the gifted property within ten years of its receipt. If the gift is part of a "tax shelter gifting arrangement", the donor cannot use a value for the property in excess of the cost amount.

(iii) Ecological Property

There are similar rules for gifts of ecologically sensitive property to the crown, a municipality or a charity that is approved for the conservation and protection of the environment. There are incentives for owners of ecologically sensitive land to protect that land while at the same time qualifying for a tax benefit. The precise nature of the conveyance of property will depend on legal issues and in some cases there may be split ownership.

Special rules apply when valuing gifts of ecological property. These include gifts of the land itself and gifts of easements over the land. The use of easements provides some flexibility, permitting the owner to retain legal title while fettering its future use and preventing development, but this can raise difficult valuation issues in some cases. The fair market value will be determined by the Minister of the Environment and there are extensive rules for the procedures to be followed and appeals if the amount determined is not acceptable to the donor. As in the case of gifts of cultural property, a charity accepting a gift is subject to a penalty if it disposes of the property within ten years or changes its use without the consent of the Minister of the Environment. Under the Ecological Gifts Program, Environment Canada certifies that land is ecologically sensitive and an expert panel certifies the value.

Deductions or credits for gifts of ecologically sensitive land or interests in that land are available for carry-forward for 10 years, rather than the usual five years.

7. Gifts of Inventory

Unlike gifts of capital property, gifts of inventory do not permit the donor to choose an amount between the cost of the property and its fair market value. As a result, a gift of property that is part of the inventory of a business will result in an income inclusion. While there will be a corresponding eligible amount for the gift (the eligible amount will depend on whether any advantage is received by the donor), it is frequently less advantageous to donate inventory rather than capital property. This is one of the reasons why special rules were enacted for gifts of inventory made by artists, as discussed above.

Corporations can claim a deduction for gifts of medicine held in inventory to a registered charity, if the charity has received financial assistance from CIDA and uses the medicine in carrying out its foreign activities. For gifts made on or after July 1, 2008, the medicine must have been available to be used by the charity at least six months prior to its expiration date and must qualify as a drug (within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act) which meets certain technical requirements. In addition, a prescribed return must be filed and the charity must in the opinion of the Minister of International Cooperation meet certain conditions prescribed by regulation. This limits the situations in which corporations can claim tax relief for donations of medicine from inventory.

8. Gifts to the Crown

A gift to Her Majesty in right of Canada or Her Majesty in right of a Province (a "crown gift") is subject to the same income limitation as other gifts, i.e. 75% of the donor's income for the year plus 25% of any taxable capital gain, plus an amount equal to 25% of recapture of previously claimed capital cost allowance. Consequently, crown gifts provide the same tax relief as gifts to other qualified donees. The crown will include an agent of the crown, and gifts to the museums listed in the Museums Act (including, for instance, the National Gallery of Canada, the Canadian Museum of Civilization, the Canadian Museum for Human Rights and the Canadian Museum of Nature) are treated as gifts to the crown.

9. Designations Under RRSPs, RRIFs, TFSAs and Insurance Policies

Donations made as a consequence of a direct designation of proceeds of RRSPs, RRIFs or TFSAs to a charity on the death of an individual qualify as gifts eligible for the individual donation tax credit, if the transfer of funds from RRSPs or RRIFs or TFSAs to the charity occurs within 60 months after death. The fair market value of the gift is deemed to be the fair market value, at the time of the individual's death, of the right to the transfer. Since the balance in an RRSP or RRSP is treated as income in the year of death, in the absence of a rollover to a spouse, the credit for a gift to charity in the year of death will effectively eliminate the tax otherwise payable on the balance, if there is a direct designation and an election to carrying it back. This is the same result as if there were a bequest by will of the amount included in income under the RRSP or RRIF, without having to determine the amount in advance. Although CRA will allow spouses to share the credit for a donation, this is not the case for gifts made by will. One spouse can make a gift and the other spouse can utilize the credit while alive, but on death only the estate or the deceased can claim credit and there is no opportunity to shift it to a surviving spouse.

Gifts by will and by direct designation in RRSPs, RRIFs and TFSAs or insurance policies are treated as gifts made by the estate. This provides more flexibility. If the credit is more than can be used in the year of death or the year prior to death, the estate can carry the balance forward under the usual rules. The concept of a GRE is important. Gifts made by will and by direct designation of insurance policies, RRSPs, RRIFs and TFSAs are deemed to have been made when the property is actually transferred to the charity and the estate can choose to carry back all or part of that donation. It is unclear how the rules will apply where there are intervening life interests created by will or in the case of charitable remainder trusts.

10. Miscellaneous Issues

(i) Social Media

Social media have become relevant in some donation arrangements. Some charities raise small amounts by way of text messages. Where donors are not concerned about receipts, this can be an effective way to raise money in small amounts from a wide range of donors. Similarly, "crowdfunding" techniques might be useful for some charities. If a charity engages in a concerted effort to raise money through crowdfunding, it might be regarded as carrying on a business. A charity that carries on business is subject to revocation of registration unless (in the case of a charitable organization or public foundation), the business is "related" to its charitable purposes. One registered charity facilitates the receipt of donations by way of text messages and other electronic means. Another organization enables charities to use crowdfunding and provides access to a broad range of donors, on the theory that they will give small amounts. The donors receive an official receipt, which may be important to the donor. These arrangements do not seem to cross the line and cause the charity to be carrying on a business, but simply constitute another form of fundraising.

(ii) Dividends After Death

When an individual dies, the executors can file a separate tax return reporting any "rights or things" owned by the deceased that have been transferred to a beneficiary, such as a dividend declared by a corporation but not received at the date of death. When an election is made, the amount received is income of the beneficiary. This often occurs where shares are transferred by will and the recipient is "beneficially interested" in the estate. If a corporation has declared but not paid a dividend prior to the death and the shares are transferred to a charity under the will, the dividend will not be subject to tax when received by the charity. If a dividend is declared and received by the estate after death, that dividend could be taxed in the estate, even if the shares are transferred to the charity. If the shares are transferred to the charity and the dividend is declared and paid after the transfer, the dividend will not be subject to tax in the hands of the charity. A number of factors are often relevant in dealing with private corporation shares, death and charitable donations.

(iii) Canada/U.S. Issues

Under the Canada-United States Income Tax Convention (the "Treaty"), Canadian residents are entitled to relief for gifts made to eligible U.S. organizations, subject to 75% of income for the year from U.S. sources. There are rules without that limit for gifts made to a university or college at which the donor or a family member was a student.

The U.S. organization is not a "qualified donee", as defined in the ITA. CRA has taken the position that a Canadian registered charity cannot treat such a gift as a gift to a qualified donee. Registered charities cannot make gifts other than in the course of carrying out their charitable activities to anyone other than a qualified donee. This is often a factor in the plans for donors who wish to assist Canadian charities in carrying on activities in other countries. There is more latitude for the donor to make a gift directly to the U.S. organization than to make a gift to a registered Canadian charity, with a view to having it support the U.S. organization with a grant.

(iv) Split Receipting

Under the "split receipting" rules, the value of a gift is the excess of the value of the donated property over the value of any benefit or advantage received by the donor or a person not dealing at arm's length with the donor. This will apply where some consideration is received from the charity, such as recognition, a small gift, membership, a meal, etc. A charity must place a value on any benefit received by the donor in exchange for the payment, and issue a receipt for the "eligible" amount, even if the benefit is not from the charity itself. As discussed below, the 2016 budget proposes relieving rules for GST/HST where a donor receives an inducement from a charity subject to the split-receipting rules.

(v) Tax Shelters

As a result of perceived abuses, the value of the property donated to a charity cannot exceed its cost, if the gift occurs within three years of acquisition of the property by the donor, or if the donor acquired the property within the preceding ten years and it is reasonable to conclude that one of the main reasons for acquiring it was to make the gift to a qualified done, regardless of the actual value of the property. If property is acquired with any expectation that it may be given to a registered charity during the lifetime of the owner, its value cannot exceed its cost. This does not apply to gifts of inventory, marketable securities, Canadian real estate, certified cultural property or approved ecological property or to gifts on death, but applies to gifts of cultural property if the donor acquired the property as part of a "tax shelter gifting arrangement". The intention of the donor when the donated property is acquired is relevant. If one of the main reasons for acquiring the property was to make a gift (other than by will), the donor may have to use the acquisition cost as the fair market value at the time of the gift. For gifts that are subject to the three-year rule or the 10-year rule there are extensive "tracing" rules to deal with transfers of property prior to the time of the gift.

The reassessment period for participants in tax shelters or "reportable transactions" is extended until three years after filing where the information that should have been filed by the tax shelter promoter or with respect to the reportable transaction has not been filed on a timely basis or has not been filed at all. In most situations, if a taxpayer files a notice of objection to an assessment, there is no requirement to pay the amount in dispute. To discourage taxpayers from participating in charitable donation tax shelters and to reduce the risk that unpaid amounts will not be collected after objections and appeals have been exhausted, CRA can collect 50% of the disputed amount of tax, interest or penalties even if an objection or appeal is pending.

(vi) Anti-Avoidance Rules

An anti-avoidance rule can apply to a charity that receives cash from a donor and uses it to buy property from the donor at more than its cost. These rules are very far reaching and can have a significant effect on a number of situations in which donors expect to receive credit for the value of the property rather than its cost. CRA expects charities to be diligent in establishing the fair market value based on the "cost" approach, and in determining the value of any advantage that would reduce the eligible amount of a gift. If a donor fails to inform the registered charity of circumstances that reduce the eligible amount, despite the amount shown on the official receipts, the eligible amount will be nil. This is a significant risk for a donor who is prepared to gamble that an advantage will not reduce the eligible amount of the gift. Registered charities should review the circumstances in which gifts of property are received when determining the eligible amount of the gift. In many cases, this will require consultations with the donor.

(vii) Intermediate Sanctions

CRA can assess charities for intermediate sanctions, which give it the option of assessing tax or penalties rather than revoking registration, for various types of non-compliance, such as issuing improper receipts, carrying on an unrelated business (in the case of a charitable foundation or charitable organization) or carrying on any business (in the case of a private foundation), acquiring control of a corporation, conferring an undue benefit and other defaults. The rules for creating endowments, transfers between charities and meeting the disbursement quota require charities to plan carefully. Anti-avoidance rules prevent "trafficking" in unused charitable donations made by corporations.

(viii) Private Foundations

A private foundation that owns more than 2% of any class of shares of a corporation is required to report its holdings together with those of persons not dealing at arm's length with the foundation when filing its T3010 return. Where the foundation holds more than 2% and the combined holdings of the foundation and non-arm's length persons exceed 20%, either the foundation or the other persons (or the group collectively) must divest to below 20%. If the divestiture does not occur within stipulated periods of time, the foundation will be subject to penalties. CRA can treat non-arm's length persons as dealing at arm's length, if sufficient reasons are given.

(ix) Disbursement Quota

The disbursement quota requires a registered charity to spend at least 3.5% of the average value of its accumulated investment assets in the preceding two years on its own charitable activities or by making gifts to qualified donees. Charitable organizations with less than $100,000 of such assets and charitable foundations with less than $25,000 of such assets are not subject to this requirement. Previous gifts with restrictions that prevent the charity from spending the capital will be restricted under charity or trust law, after the disbursement quota rules were relaxed.

(x) Refund of Gifts

CRA can issue a reassessment to disallow a credit or deduction and make consequential assessments if donated property is returned to the donor by the qualified donee. The qualified donee returning a gift must issue a revised receipt and send a copy to CRA if the amount changes by more than $50. Qualified donees must file an information return to disclose returned gifts.

(xi) List of Qualified Donees

CRA maintains a publicly available list of qualified donees, including registered charities, RCAAAs, Canadian municipalities, certain municipal and public bodies performing a function of government in Canada, certain housing corporations, prescribed foreign universities and certain foreign charities. Most qualified donees are subject to some of the compliance rules that previously applied to registered charities and are required to maintain and make available proper books and records and issue proper receipts. Failure to do so could lead to suspension of receipting privileges, removal from the list of qualified donees or revocation of registration, in the case of RCAAAs. RCAAAs are required to have the promotion of amateur athletics in Canada as their exclusive purpose and function and are subject to rules dealing with the conferral of undue benefits and carrying on an unrelated business, similar to the rules that apply to registered charities.

CRA can refuse to register or revoke the registration of a charity or RCAAA or suspend its receipting privileges if a director or equivalent official is found to have been involved in certain inappropriate conduct. This generally would be the case if that person has been found guilty of a criminal offence in Canada (or outside Canada, if that offence, committed in Canada, would be a criminal offence) relating to financial dishonesty and has not received a pardon. It also applies to directors or equivalent officials who had been involved in the operation of a charity or RCAAA that was engaged in serious non-compliance for which its registration was revoked within the past five years, or who were "promoters" of a "gifting arrangement" or other tax shelter in which a registered charity or RCAAA participated, if the registration of the charity or RCAAA was revoked within the past five years. There is no requirement to disclose the existence of ineligible individuals in an annual return and CRA will use an educational process if it finds ineligible individuals are acting as trustees or directors, and ask the registered charity or RCAAA to remove them. This could raise non-tax issues.

(xii) Graduated Rate Estates

There will be a deemed disposition of capital property immediately before death at fair market value unless there is a spousal rollover. For deaths after 2015, the credit will not be available until the estate actually transfers the property to a charity (within 60 months after death). The previous limit of 36 months has been extended to 60 months to address concerns that could have arisen if there are disputes involving an estate and a transfer of property cannot be completed within 36 months. However, for transfers made after 36 months, the credit cannot be carried back to a previous year of the estate.

The capital gain will be based on the fair market value of the property at the date of death, but the charitable receipt will be based on the value of the property when the transfer occurs. If the value of the property fluctuates (which is almost always likely to be the case, except for property with a clearly fixed value), the value of the gift will be more or less than the value used to determine the capital gain. This presents a potential mismatch, along with the concern about the interest cost, if the transfer does not occur until after the terminal return has been filed.

There are issues about transfers of the residue of an estate with an intervening life interest. Jurisprudence has established that a gift of the residue of an estate to a charity is treated as a current gift, regardless of the fact that the charity does not receive the property until later, as long as the value of the residual interest can be calculated using actuarial principles, and there is no discretion to encroach on capital prior to the death of the income beneficiary. The value of the residual interest is determined by subtracting the current value of the life interest, based on various assumptions, from the value of the assets, as in the case of a charitable remainder trust. Gifts of residual interests will no longer be allowed until there is an actual transfer of property.

If there is a delay in completing the transfer of property by will, there may be questions about income received on that property before the transfer. CRA says the estate cannot allocate the income to the charity and deduct it in computing its income and, also treat it as a charitable donation. The estate will be able to choose one course or the other, but not both. If income earned on property not transferred until after death might be regarded as income of the estate, "payable" to the charity, deductible in computing the estate's income and included in the income of the charity, then this should be relatively neutral and not cause tax consequences for the estate or the charity. On the other hand, if the income is treated as part of the gift to the charity, there might be a delay if the property has not been transferred and the time frame for recognizing the donation is delayed. For deaths before 2016, the gift was treated as a gift in the year of death and the income from that property would likely be regarded as either income payable to the charity (and deductible by the estate) or part of the gift and thus included in the amount of the receipt for the year of death.

An estate can carry back a capital loss realized in its first year and deduct it from gains in the terminal return. The estate will file an amended terminal return or an amended return for the prior year, if a donation credit is carried back. This could affect the interest that is refunded as a result of the overpayment in the terminal return or the year prior to death.

Proposed changes dealing with partnerships in the Budget have been reintroduced. If a registered charity owns an interest as a member of partnership, it will not for that reason alone be considered to be carrying on the business of the partnership if liability is limited (in other words, if it is a limited partnership) and the member deals at arm's length with all of the other members and together with non-arm's length persons, does not own more than 20% of the value of all of the partnership interests. In addition, there will be "look through" rule for private foundations, to ensure that if they own an interest in a partnership that owns shares of a corporation, the excess business holdings rules will apply.

The budget will add a rule to ensure that when the charities supplies property or services in exchange for a donation and a tax receipt is issued for a portion of the donation, only the value of the property or services supplied by the charity will be subject to GST/HST. This will apply to supplies that are not otherwise exempt and is designed to make sure the part of the donation that exceeds the value of the property or services is not subject to GST/HST, for supplies made after March 22, 2016. If a charity did not collect GST/HST on the full value of donations received in exchange for an inducement made after December 21, 2002 and prior to March 22, 2016, if GST/HST was charged on the value of the inducement, consistent with the split-receipting rules, or if the value of that inducement was less than $500, no additional GST/HST will be payable. In other situations, the charity will have to calculate and remit GST/HST on the value of the inducement only, and not on the entire amount of the "donation".

As noted above, several new rules will be introduced dealing with life insurance policies. The capital dividend account rules for private corporations and the rules for determining the adjusted cost base of an interest in a partnership will be amended. An "insurance benefit limit" will be the portion of the death benefit that exceeds the adjusted cost basis of the policy, regardless of whether the corporation or partnership owns the policy or is a beneficiary, to prevent taxpayers from using structures that would inappropriately increase the capital dividend account or the adjusted cost base of the interest in the partnership. These rules apply to death benefits received as a result of a death on or after March 22, 2016. Other rules will deal with transfers of life insurance policies to prevent inappropriate tax-free receipts as a result of a disposition of an interest in a life insurance policy. New rules will apply to the capital dividend account and the adjusted cost base if an interest in a life insurance policy was disposed of before March 22, 2016 for consideration in excess of the proceeds of disposition determined under a "policy transfer rule".

Other rules will apply if an interest in a life insurance policy has been disposed of prior to March 22, 2016 to a corporation or partnership as a contribution of capital.

Advice should be sought in connection with all of these rules if they are relevant in a particular situation.

When Charities Die

Contrary to public perception, it is quite common for charities to die. The majority of charities are small, volunteer-run entities and some run out of steam and get deregistered. Since 2011, over 7,536 charities have had their status revoked by Canada Revenue Agency for reasons ranging from exhaustion and mergers (which produce voluntary revocations), failure to file the annual return, or cause. What happens when there is a gift by will to one of these defunct entities?

Here are three scenarios.

Intestacy When a charity is revoked it will probably cease to exist as both a registered charity and legal entity. The intestacy resulting from the failed gift will cause the funds to become part of the residue of the estate and be distributed to the residual beneficiaries.

Revoked but Intact Charities may be revoked by CRA, but the underlying corporation or trust remains in place. The legal beneficiary still exists despite the loss of status as a registered charity and the gift is enforceable, unless the will contains conditional language about CRA registration. A gift to an entity that is no longer operating as a charity is probably not what the donor had in mind.

Successor Organization In the case of charity mergers, there is often a successor organization that will be deemed to be the lawful beneficiary of any bequest to the original charity. This is sound legal practice that protects the successor charity and ensures gifts do not fail. In certain cases there may be issues of donor intention. In the case of a regional hospital merger, the donor may wish to support Town A and instead may end up supporting Region B. Or the donor wants to support St. X church, but ends up supporting the diocese after the church is closed.

A related issue is a charity that changes its charitable purposes or priority programs. While this may be a sign of an evolving and healthy charity, a change in purpose or programs may be inconsistent with the donor's wishes. The charity continues to exist, but the program they wish to support does not. This may occur within large charities such as hospitals or universities that may discontinue a program or close a faculty.

In an estate plan, there are a few ways to address the risk of a charity closing or a program being shuttered. Your first line of defense is to review your will at least once every five years, and research the charities you want to support. Do they still exist? Are they showing signs of financial stability and effectiveness? Do you agree with their current direction and program? Being diligent about reviewing your beneficiaries and updating your will works well, but there is always the chance that these changes don't get made due to misfortune or good-old-fashion procrastination.

Another approach is to name a "bridge charity" in the will. For example, Aqueduct Foundation, which is a public foundation with donor advised funds supported by Scotiatrust, enables the donor to name both registered charities and charitable purposes. The will names the bridge charity, which ensures that the estate donation is successful. The terms of the legacy fund specifies the charities or causes you want to support. If a charity ceases to exist, no problem, your gift to Aqueduct will succeed – and your estate will get a tax receipt – and Aqueduct will follow your instructions about a replacement charity or cause.

Here's an example. A donor wants to support land conservation programs in the area of her cottage with a gift by will, but the only conservation charity in the area is young and struggling to survive. She chooses to establish a legacy fund at Aqueduct Foundation with a charitable purpose to address her vision. The fund is structured to create resources for land conservation in the future. Her fund would provide key strategic funding, potentially creating solutions that don't yet exist and support for charities not yet established. It's a prescient and active form of philanthropy, in effect, making the future.

In some ways making a charitable gift by will is an exercise in time travel. A donor plans a gift based on current reality and it is received – often decades later – by a charity that may have completely different programs or mission. The gap between intention and effect may be wide. Effective estate and charitable gift planning will help make sure your vision becomes a future reality.

BUDGET 2016

Amanda Stacey and Nicole K. D'Aoust
Miller Thomson LLP

Key Changes

The Budget did not contain many significant new measures that might affect future gifts to charity. Unfortunately, the Budget did contain a reversal of the 2015 Federal Budget proposal to eliminate capital gains tax that may be payable by donors who make gifts of real estate or private company shares to charity.

New Charitable Donation Tax Credit Rate for Estate Donations

On December 7, 2015, the Department of Finance released draft legislation that introduced a new marginal tax rate for high-income earners. The legislation has the effect of increasing the rate of income tax from 29% to 33% on taxable income over $200,000. This draft legislation has not yet been passed by Parliament; however, it was announced that the change will be effective January 1, 2016.

In this same draft legislation, Finance also introduced amendments to the charitable donation tax credit to take into account the new higher marginal tax rate. Rather than simply increase the rate of the credit for gifts over $200 to the highest tax rate, which is how the credit previously worked, there is a new calculation that essentially applies a credit of 33% (the top rate) to the extent that individuals have income taxed at that rate.

The Budget proposed technical changes to ensure that this new 33% charitable donation tax credit will also apply to trusts and graduated rate estates. These changes are designed to ensure that the 33% donation tax credit applies to all income earned by trusts and graduated rate estates that is taxed at the highest marginal rate. If the legislation is implemented in the manner proposed, trusts and graduated rate estates that are subject to the 33% rate on all of their taxable income will receive a donation tax credit of 33% on all donations above $200 made after the 2015 taxation year. The measure will also extend the proposed 33% charitable donation tax credit to donations made by a graduated rate estate during a taxation year of the estate that straddles 2015 and 2016.

A graduated rate estate is, generally speaking, an estate that has designated itself as a graduated rate estate of an individual for a taxation year ending after 2015. The estate will maintain its status as a graduate rate estate for up to 36 months, and, during this time, certain special tax benefits are available to the estate. For example, graduated rate estates are permitted to allocate charitable donation tax credits as follows:

- the taxation year of the estate in which the corresponding donation was made;
- an earlier taxation year of the estate; or
- the last two taxation years of the individual.

Notably, the Department of Finance has also released draft legislation that proposes to allow estates to make allocations of charitable donation tax credits for a further 24 months after they cease to be graduated rate estates. In that case, according to the Department, an estate could make an allocation of the tax credit among either the year in which the donation was made or the last two taxation years of the individual.

Reversal of Capital Gains Exemption for Donations of Real Estate and Private Company Shares

The Budget announced the Federal Government's intention to reverse proposals made in the 2015 Federal Budget with respect to donations of the cash proceeds from sales of real estate and private company shares. The 2015 Federal Budget proposed to exempt from income tax capital gains incurred on the sale of real estate and private company shares to the extent that the cash proceeds from the sale of such property were donated to a registered charity within 30 days of the sale. These changes were to take effect starting in 2017, and draft legislation implementing these changes had already been released. The Budget confirmed that the Government does not intend to proceed with these changes.

This announcement came as a disappointment to many persons working in the charitable sector who have lobbied for some years for relief from capital gains tax in respect of donations of these types of property.

Notably, this reversal in the Budget will not affect the tax credits or deductions normally available for in-kind donations of real estate or private company shares. Moreover, gifts of publicly-listed securities are also not affected by the Budget announcement and will continue to be exempt from tax on capital gains.

It is important to emphasize that all of the changes discussed in this article are still in draft form. For donors who are contemplating different ways to give to charity, it will be essential to monitor the status of these legislative proposals and watch for them to be passed by Parliament.

Aimee Zeglinski-Spinney

Teen Survivor Credits Research Advances

Aimee Zeglinski-Spinney was running down the field during a soccer game for her competitive team when suddenly she collapsed.

It was obvious to the paramedics who rushed her to Children's Hospital of Eastern Ontario (CHEO) in Ottawa, Ontario that her femur, the largest and strongest bone in the body, was broken. What wasn't immediately evident was that the 11-year-old also had bone cancer.

"I couldn't understand why I wasn't able to stand or what had happened. I was in shock," recalls Aimee, now 17. "My X-ray was mottled, something looked wrong beyond the fracture. The doctors and my parents were very worried."

A week later, just days before her twelfth birthday, Aimee was diagnosed with osteosarcoma, the same cancer that claimed Terry Fox. Her birthday gift that year was an unusual one: surgery for a port-a-cath in her neck and chest, a body cast, and intensive chemotherapy treatments.

Around 340 Canadians are diagnosed annually with bone cancers like osteosarcoma. Survival rates for those with localized osteosarcoma have improved since Terry's diagnosis in 1977, and range from 60 to 80 per cent, but the prognosis remains grim for those with metastatic disease.

Aimee says she "was terrified" when she was diagnosed. "I worried that I would lose my leg, or worse, my life. I asked the doctors if I was going to die. Everyone reassured me that I would live, that I would fight it."

And fight it she did. The preteen lost her hair, faced plummeting white-blood cell counts, frequent infections, excruciating mouth sores, sleepless nights, dizzy spells, body casts, daily needles, and blood transfusions. Then came a 20-hour surgery to remove the tumour and fix her leg.

"In Terry's day, my surgery would have consisted of a full-leg amputation," says Aimee. "However, in my operation, the surgical team managed to remove both the tumour and my broken femur, insert a donor bone, and then attach it to my knee and hip with tons of hardware."

Then came five more months of grueling chemo followed by a complete remission.

Today Aimee is a healthy 17-year-old who resides with her parents and two younger siblings. She celebrated five-years cancer free in February 2016 and is considered cured – something she credits to Terry Fox.

"[Terry] made cancer a cause to care about, talk about, run for," she says. "Myself and countless others are alive today in large part due to his journey and his relentless pursuit for cancer research and care."

Her parents Scott Spinney and Joie Zeglinski agree.

"All the research that [the Terry Fox Foundation] did helped find a cure that helped cure her," Scott says, noting that more cancer research is still needed for those with hard-to-treat forms of the disease.

Their daughter's cancer was "a blessing and a curse," mom Joie adds. The teen became incredibly resilient, as well as a cancer research advocate. But unintended effects from the chemotherapy treatments still linger.

"The usual side effects from the chemo Aimee received would be cardiac, kidney, hearing, and bone issues," Joie says, noting that while doctors keep a close eye on the teen, Aimee is thriving. "It's hard to put into words what it's like to see her doing so well now, it's certainly what we had hoped for."

Aimee graduates from high school this spring, then she'll begin studies in the biomedical program at the University of Ottawa. Her dream is to be a doctor - maybe even an oncologist - and give back to the community that gave her so much, including the Terry Fox Foundation.

Not that Aimee hasn't made her mark already: The young woman has given speeches at numerous Terry Fox events, participated in the run nearly every year, fundraised, and will be a summer student in the laboratory of Dr. John Bell this summer. Dr. Bell is a senior scientist at the Ottawa Health Research Institute whose work in developing oncolytic viruses has been supported by Terry Fox Foundation for more than a decade.

His lab is now developing targeted therapeutics to cure cancers while leaving healthy cells unharmed. Oncolytic viruses stimulate a patient's own immune systems to destroy tumours, killing only cancerous cells and, potentially, avoiding toxic treatments like chemotherapy that patients are currently forced to undergo.

"Aimee is a bright, impressive and talented young woman who has fought her own personal battle with cancer and now wants to be involved in advancing research to help others," says Dr. Bell. "We are very pleased and proud she is joining our team and helping us strive to fulfill Terry's dream of finding cures for cancer."

As for Aimee, the young woman is looking forward to a promising future.

"If I can survive the incomparably largest obstacle of my life, I can definitely survive all future challenges," Aimee says.

"Having overcome such a daunting hurdle fuels my optimism for the future. I might be scarred from my hip to my ankle, but with the help of cancer research, I am still growing, growing stronger than ever."

GOVERNMENT BRIEF

The Muttart Foundation

Statistics Required

Canada has an international reputation for the gathering and dissemination of information through Statistics Canada. Its various studies provide important data to government, businesses and the public about both social and economic issues.

Yet one element of Canadian society is particularly underrepresented in available studies: Canada's non-profit sector. This lack of data not only is inconvenient; but also means that policy and regulatory decisions are made in the absence of reliable information.

• Members of Parliament and the public can easily learn how Canada is doing in producing mushrooms, but they cannot find out how many nonprofit organizations exist in the country.

• One can determine each month how many eggs are produced and the disposition of those eggs, but cannot find any Statistics Canada information on how many people are employed by Canada's nonprofit organizations.

While people might instinctively think of charities as small organizations, the 2003 National Survey of Nonprofit and Voluntary Organizations (NSNVO) demonstrated that the total revenue of nonprofit organizations in the country exceeded $100 billion and employed more than two million people.

The Satellite Accounts report in 2009 demonstrated that the broader non-profit sector, which includes hospitals, universities and colleges, exceeded by more than one third the value added of the entire retail trade industry, and outpaced the value added of the mining, oil and gas extraction industry. The study also reported that the core non-profit sector (which excludes hospitals, universities and colleges) was growing faster than the economy as a whole.

The latest version of the Canadian Survey of Giving, Volunteering and Participating (CSGVP) in 2010 showed that 84% of Canadians donate to non-profit organizations and that 47% of Canadians volunteer, giving of their time to the equivalent of more than one million full-time jobs.

But all of this data is now out of date – certainly more dated than most other parts of society measured through Statistics Canada research. Despite the size and importance of the non-profit sector, we know little about it as a whole.

Canada's non-profit sector is composed of two types of organizations: registered charities and organizations which are not charities, but which exist for a purpose other than profit. There is some data available about those organizations which have received charitable status. Almost 86,000 charities fall into this category. Every charity is required to file an annual return with the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) and much of the information on that return is available publicly.

There is little known about those non-profit organizations that are not registered charities, although the last Statistics Canada study on the sector in 2003 showed there were almost as many non-charities in the voluntary sector as there were charities. Non-profit organizations that are not charities are only required to file returns if their income or asset levels surpass certain thresholds. There is no information about the level of compliance with those reporting requirements, and none of those returns are publicly available.

Having more detailed information about registered charities is not a proxy for the full sector. Extrapolation is not an option.

The reports identified above have provided vital information that has helped promote discussions within the non-profit sector and between that sector and others. The data are widely used within the sector, in discussions between the sector and governments which rely on nonprofits to deliver programs and services to Canadians, and in conversations with the Canadians all of these non- profits are designed to serve. The absence of current data frustrates meaningful dialogue.

Additional research would be useful to determine how much of a role the sector now plays and how much larger a role it might be able to play. Just as government and the public use data that are now available about industry, the economy and social trends, they can use (as they have used) data about the non-profit sector. The Muttart Foundation does not think it is necessary that each of these studies be carried out annually. In an ideal world, they could be carried out in rotation, so that one of the studies was completed each year. Having information that is no more than three years old would provide significant benefits to those in the sector, governments, academics and the general public.

We encourage the Committee to recommend that Statistics Canada be provided with the funds necessary to reinstitute these studies and to conduct them on a regular schedule into the future.

DIVERSITY

Changing Canada's Charitable Sector

Robin Fowler
Offord Group and Marts & Lundy

Canada is becoming an increasingly diverse society. Canada's charitable sector will have to adapt to this rapidly changing human landscape.

Here are some diversity projections for Canada by 2031:

- 1 in 4 people in Canada will have been born elsewhere
- nearly 1 in 3 newcomers will follow a non-Christian religion

The Greater Toronto Area (GTA) is one of the most diverse regions in the world – half of Toronto's population was born outside of Canada: 45% of Torontonians are visible minorities; over 140 languages and dialects are spoken in Toronto; the top five visible minority groups are:

- South Asian, 12.0 per cent of the population;
- Chinese, 11.4 per cent;
- Black, 8.4 per cent;
- Filipino, 4.1 per cent; and
- Latin American, 2.6 per cent

Vancouver also has a high percentage of visible minority and immigrant populations: in 2006, 51 % of the city's total population was of visible minority background and 45% of the total population were immigrants. The most numerous groups of recent immigrants are from China (26%), Hong Kong (11%), Philippines (9%), UK (5%) and India (5%).

But consider these statistics indicating the diversity of the Charitable Sector in the United States, the UK and Canada:

- 6.9% of top development officers at big American charities are minorities,
- One is the number of chief executives from an ethnic minority community among the UK's top 50 charities,
- One is the number of chief executives with a disability among the UK's top 50 charities,
- 62% of charities and 80% of foundations have executive teams without any visible minorities in Toronto.

The benefits of diversifying a charity's human resources to be more reflective of the communities they represent include: 1) broadened networks and outreach initiatives, 2) new volunteers and donors, and 3) novel perspectives and approaches to fundraising.

There are many initiatives a charity can take to become more diverse. At the Board level the charity can:

- Target the number of new, diverse recruits for the Board within the next year
- Develop a sensible plan – don't just recruit for the sake of diversification– recruit diverse people with diverse competencies and skill sets that support your diverse needs and objectives!
- Measure progress – Routinely evaluate the progress of your plan and assess whether or not the goal is achievable – do these need to be amended?
- Report! – What have you learned? What are the next steps?

Regarding donors and prospects, a charity should conduct an analysis of its database to determine if prospects and donors represent the various communities a charity serves or seeks to serve. When gaps are found, it should develop outreach strategies to identify staff and volunteers who are natural ambassadors for its cause within these diverse communities. It should also explore varied communication and marketing channels and methods.

Here are some tips for a more diverse donor cultivation and stewardship:

- No two donors are the same
- Opportunities for engagement will appeal to some and not to others
- Similarly, what is considered a valuable 'thank you' differs from one donor to the next
- Brainstorm assorted methods to cultivate prospects and steward donors in keeping with their diversity
- What do they personally value? What would be the most meaningful to them?
- Golden rule: KNOW THY DONOR!

Much like establishing a "Culture of Philanthropy," charities need to create a "Culture of Diversity." Key elements would include: 1) a vision for the future around diversity that would make diversity a part of all planning undertaken by the charity; 2) a Board leading by example, and 3) time, structures and resources being put in place to support a growth in diversity.

Everyone involved needs to be committed to the impact of diversity and a charity's quest for authentic and equal representation.

REFUGEE CRISIS

Collaborative Approaches

The Syrian refugee crisis emerged into public consciousness in summer 2015 resulting in public outcry. The Government of Canada elected in November announced an expedited Syrian refugee initiative, and within weeks, the countdown was on to prepare for the welcome and settlement of thousands of Syrian refugees.

Charities and nonprofits are at the frontline of this response, working alongside all levels of government and the private sector. Newcomer and settlement service organizations are leading these efforts, with organizations from other sub-sectors also playing important roles.

Newcomer settlement agencies: At the frontline

Debbie Douglas, Executive Director at Ontario Council of Agencies Serving Immigrants (OCASI), notes that the sophistication of the newcomer and settlement service sector isn't news to those within the sector, yet the current situation has brought it to the attention of others. Despite this, the dramatic volume of arrivals within a short period of time is presenting challenges for some organizations as they ramp up to meet the increased demand on services.

Queenie Choo, CEO at S.U.C.C.E.S.S., a multi-service organization serving British Columbia's Lower Mainland, explains that refugees can have different needs depending on the program through which they arrive in Canada. Choo provides the example that the settlement experiences of privately sponsored refugees vary depending on their sponsorship agreement holders, who may have extensive or limited connection to communities. Organizations like S.U.C.C.E.S.S. act as cultural brokers, preventing newcomers from falling through gaps, and bridging them to the services that will help them to be independent and truly integrated within their new communities.

Ratna Omidvar, Chair at Lifeline Syria, describes how the charitable and nonprofit sector is ideally situated to provide supports, given its record of success at welcoming refugees to Canada. The sector helps meet a number of needs, including food, clothing, housing, transportation, language support, and medical care. Omidvar adds that it's also central to providing legal advice, community engagement, and job placement. Organizations from other areas also have important roles to play. Meeting these needs necessitates collaborative approaches, as Choo says, "one organization cannot do it all."

A need for collaborative approaches Organizations are leveraging their strengths and working across sectors to enhance the response to Syrian refugees. The Welcome Fund for Syrian Refugees, initiated by Manulife and Community Foundations of Canada, is an example of a cross-sectorial collaboration that builds on the strengths of each partner. The fund will support local strategies across Canada to build and strengthen the housing and resettlement efforts for Syrian refugees, working in partnership with Canada's network of 191 community foundations and leading agencies. Ian Bird, President of Community Foundations of Canada (CFC), states: "We as community foundations are not experts in the resettlement space. However, we are experts and leaders in Canadian communities."

Douglas describes how some mainstream organizations offer their services within a settlement service organization on an ongoing basis. The goal of this practice is to reduce barriers to support, limiting the need for refugees to repeat their story every time they access a new service. The location and set-up of programs often reflect funding structures, and as Douglas asserts, service users should be able to access services without needing to know who funds what.

For organizations seeking to establish new programs to support Syrian refugees or other newcomers, Choo suggests first looking at available community resources to assess service gaps and reduce the likelihood of service duplication. Omidvar notes that the Ministry of Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship's resource on newcomer and settlement service organizations by province and territory is a good place to start.

Ensuring long-term support

The Canadian public has overwhelmingly supported efforts to welcome and settle Syrian refugees; however a broader context of issues often goes unaddressed. Douglas explains that while there is a real sense that Canadians want to help, there is also an underbelly that we need to pay attention to. "We need to focus on the less welcoming aspects of our community and not allow them to fester." This highlights the need to talk about and address xenophobia and islamophobia in our communities, and acknowledge that our responses to refugee crises can be selective. It's important to consider how these factors inform the levels of support received by newcomer and settlement service agencies. This will be an important consideration as organizations continue to support refugees in the months and years to come.

There is a role for all of us to play in educating our communities about the meaningful contributions we each make regardless of how we got here. As Omidvar states, "refugees have consistently achieved success in Canada over the long term – just as they benefit from finding refuge here, we benefit from their skills and ambition. They become part of the national fabric and over time, they or their children will thrive."

REFUGEE CRISIS

Daphne Mainprize
Co-chair, Mariposans for Refugees

Mariposans for Refugees

Community leader Richard Johnston got on the phone to a few key people in Orillia, Ontario late May, 2015. Please help, he asked.

Recognizing the plight of the people of Syria, now in the fifth year of civil war, Dick's message was clear: "I cannot stand by and do nothing. Will you join me in making a difference?"

Dick's call to action launched the community group, Mariposa for Refugees: Project Syria 2015 (M4R). It held several general meetings for the public. The first featured guest speaker, Rob Jenkins, a former Orillian, who manages the humanitarian response and development programme of UNICEF in Jordan. Each meeting provided an update to attendees.

The learning curve was steep at first. At the top of the priority list was the need to find a registered charity partner to choose and confirm a sponsorship agreement holder (SAH). A sponsorship agreement holder is an incorporated organization that has signed an agreement with the Minister of Citizenship, Immigration and Multiculturalism Canada to resettle refugees.

St. Paul's United Church, Orillia and M4R agreed to join forces. The result: M4R became part of the Eco-Justice Ministry for St. Paul's, which gave M4R the ability to issue tax receipts for donations, the administrative/accounting supported needed operationally, and a SAH through the United Church of Canada.

Reverend Ted Reeve, Minister, St. Paul's United Church, Orillia, explains the role his congregation played in collaborating with the Mariposans for Refugees: "Members of St. Paul's have been involved in the sponsorship of refugees for over 20 years, and so it was not out of the ordinary for our people to step up. Their experience helped the broader community team see both the challenges and opportunities of refugee sponsorship."

The next big step was the planning and implementation of a fundraising campaign. This was launched in a spectacular way thanks to community conductor and musician, Roy Menagh, who early on had offered to host a concert at the Orillia Opera House. An early November evening saw over 200 talented citizens perform. That night M4R raised $14,000, and donations poured in following the concert. Further fundraising efforts through St. Paul's Church, and Christmas concerts added to the coffers. By the time M4R was ready to receive its Syrian family, it had over $80,000 in the bank.

Finding accommodation for this family was the next challenge. Renowned Canadian artist, Charles Pachter, and his nephew, Adam Ross, generously offered a five-bedroom rent free for a year. This contribution meant that a larger family of five to eight persons could be accommodated.

Preparations to receive a family began. The steering committee sub-divided into working groups that were tasked with developing/managing key needs for the family. Each team went into the community and brought on board support teams.

Within a few weeks M4R had a home ready down to every detail: a fully stocked and prepared kitchen; appliances donated by Leon's Orillia; each bedroom outfitted with quilts made by a local quilting group, and other finishing touches the family would welcome.

Orillia is known as Mariposa as a result of the Canadian classic, Sunshine Sketches of a Little Town, written by Canadian humourist, Stephen Leacock. The spirit of Mariposa lies in the universality of its sense of place, home and small town values.

As Stephen Leacock famously stated, "I am a great believer in luck, and I find the harder I work the more I have of it."

Near the end of February, 2016 the long awaited call came from the United Church of Canada. The next stage of the journey was about to begin.

On a snowy, blustery early March morning M4R committee members travelled to Toronto to pick up its Syrian family. Accompanying them was Orillia Mayor Steve Clarke, as well as a translator. It was with much excitement that the committee welcomed them into their new home for the next year.

It has been a busy few months integrating the family into the community. M4R has a twelve-month commitment to the Syrian family as they settle into life as Orillians. Teams and volunteers help them with learning English, getting jobs, starting school and understanding life in Canada. Volunteers assist with the many daily tasks: grocery and clothes shopping; transportation; orientation; and medical requirements. M4R is responsible for covering all the family's costs for one year.

Over 12 million Syrians are homeless. This is more than half the Syrian population. Over four million Syrians are displaced outside of the country, with little hope of returning safely. But Orillia and other communities across Canada have put a dent in that number.

ESTATE PLANNING

Malcolm D. Burrows
Scotia Wealth Management

Art Collections

Collecting art is a passionate vocation, but it can lead to significant estate planning challenges. Simply, owning art generates questions about what to do with it when you're gone. Should we leave it to family, sell it, or donate it to a gallery?

Over the years I have worked with serious art collectors as they consider their options for donating their art, either during life or at death. Through this work I have come to realize that there is rarely a single answer to the above question. Estate plans often include a combination of inheritances, sales and donations. It depends on the collector, the collection, the family, the market, and the willingness and/or capacity of galleries to accept a collection.

The process starts with a discussion about the client's wishes and their preference about where the art should ideally go. The next step is frank assessment of the practical issues associated with each option. Art is perhaps the most personal asset, and often the wished-for destination may not be the right place in the final analysis. Kids may not like or want the art. A museum may accept it, but will the art be displayed? Or does it make sense to pursue the "catch and release" option by selling to a like-minded art lover?

A starting place for many serious collectors is to consider donating their art. While it is a rare collection that can be donated in its entirety to a single institution, often there are individual works that are of particular value and artistic significance. It is helpful to start this process during life, as there are always surprises that emerge when trying to find and negotiate with the end beneficiary.

When donating art it is essential to find the right "fit" with the recipient institution. Does your art enhance a curatorial priority or complement an existing collection held by the gallery? Is it eligible for Cultural Property status, which provides extra tax savings due to the elimination of capital gain? Does it represent a new direction for the institution, and is the gallery willing to provide curatorial resources to support the donation? With well-known artists, a gallery may have a significant collection and so the "fit" seems right, but it is reluctant to accept the gift because the artist is already well represented or it does not have the resources to care for the art properly. Discussing your collection with a number of galleries is pragmatic, but it also leaves some collectors offended by what they perceived as rejection of their treasured works.

When exploring possible beneficiaries, it is important to cast your net wide and make connections with different institutions. For example, there are prominent national galleries of the first rank, but there are also excellent regional galleries and post-secondary educational institutions. If the collector wants to ensure public display, but the art is not museum quality, it may be worthwhile to explore donating art to a hospital, hospice, woman's shelter or some other human services organization.

Aqueduct Foundation, a registered public foundation, often accepts donations of art into individual legacy funds. A legacy fund in Aqueduct simplifies the estate planning process because it can become the sole recipient of art donations. Aqueduct, often with the involvement of a trusted advisor, then determines what will happen to the art after death. This approach provides tax certainty – a receipt at death -- and the ability to negotiate the ultimate "home" of the art. Depending on the preference of the donor, the art may be sold and the funds used to support other charitable interests.

Art in an estate also poses a lot of practical challenges. Art requires valuation, insurance and storage. Knowledge of the art market and gallery community is essential. Legal advice is specialized. If an artist is involved, issues such as copyright and reversionary interests arise. If a donation is being considered you need to find the right recipient, assess the utility of a tax-effective cultural property designation, figure out the timing of the gift, and make sure the gift is well documented.

At Scotiatrust, we specialize in working with serious art collectors on their estate plans. As a corporate executor, we ensure we understand our client's wishes for their art and can implement them wisely. Whether the will involves gifts to family and friends, sales on the open market, or donations to charity, Scotiatrust can help you pass your art of the next generation.

TAX CREDITS

Where Giving Is Penalized

Adam Aptowitzer
Drache Aptowitzer LLP

People always complain about the tax laws being way too complex, but you know things are bad when even tax lawyers are losing track of the most fundamental elements of the law. And what could be a more fundamental element of income tax than knowing the right percentage to apply to a given transaction – specifically a donation?

Until a few years ago the system for calculating the donation tax credits was relatively simple. You simply added the lowest rates for donations under $200 and the highest for donations over that. Dealing with surtaxes was (and still is) tricky but we managed.

Now, though, the Federal and various Provincial governments are going their own ways in developing their donation tax credit systems. The result is asynchronous; advisors have to be careful in calculating the appropriate donation tax credit rate depending not only on what was donated, and to whom, but also on the residence of the donor and his taxable income before and after the donation.

Some of the Provinces still use the traditional system. But Alberta, Ontario, New Brunswick, Newfoundland, PEI and the Yukon all have a system where the highest tax rate is not the same as the tax credit rate for donations over $200. In Alberta the credit rate is higher than the tax rate, but in the others the credit rate is lower. Besides the complexity in calculation, where the tax rate is higher than the credit rate, those in the affected brackets really are discouraged from giving.

To illustrate the disincentive consider the former situation. When a donor at the highest marginal rate earned a dollar she would have paid tax at the highest rate, say 46 percent, on that dollar earned. In this example, the government would take 46 cents of the dollar, but the taxpayer would keep 54. If the donor decided not to keep that dollar but directed it to a registered charity, the government would forego its 46 cents in favour of the charity. The donor did not keep her 54 cents, and the government is out its 46.

Now consider the situation where the highest marginal tax rate is 50 percent, but the applicable donation tax credit rate is only 46 percent. In the situation where the individual earns a dollar but donates nothing she pays 50 cents to the government and keeps 50 cents. If, on the other hand, she decides to donate that dollar to a registered charity, she gives her half to the charity, the government foregoes its half and the donor still must pay 4 cents to the government! So the donor must pay 4 cents tax on a dollar she does not have!

The problem is of course magnified as the spread between the two rates grows. In New Brunswick the current differential is 2.46 percent, but in Ontario, when taking the surtaxes into account at the highest rates, the spread is 3.12 percent. The effect of the surtaxes effectively increases as the individual's income grows. The net result in Ontario is that those people most able to give are the most penalized for doing so.

It also puts the lie to the established practice of cheque exchange. Because a receipt cannot be issued for services given for free to the charity, the CRA encourages the 'donor' to invoice the charity for her services. The charity pays the invoice and then the donor donates the funds back to the charity. While the donor pays income tax on the money received it (used to) be offset by the credits generated from the donation (assuming both transactions took place at the highest rate). Now though there is more tax to pay than credits that can offset it. So the person who wanted to simply give his or her services to the charity for free is out of pocket!

The Federal government should be given some credit for avoiding this situation. It may have added complexity to the Income Tax Act, but its new system ensures that donors paying the highest rate receive an equal credit until they drop down into a tax lower bracket.

Years ago, donations to charity were treated as deductions rather than as credits. This was changed, apparently to ensure that the value of a donation credit was the same regardless of the income of the person who made it. Now though, we are moving into a system where the value of the credit chosen has detrimental impact to the largest donors. While all of the Provinces are hurting financially, and there will be little political will to be seen helping the rich it would make life simpler for all and remove the disincentive to giving if the Provinces would see fit to follow the model laid out by the new Federal government in its December 7, 2015 draft legislation.

WILLS

Corina Weigl
Fasken Martineau DuMoulin LLP

Another Day

One cannot be engaged in an estate planning practice without being asked "why do I need a Will". For those living family members of the recently departed entertainer, Prince, the answer will, unfortunately become all too clear. According to numerous news reports, the iconic entertainer died without a Will. As a result, the surviving family, comprised of siblings and half-siblings, can expect the legal issues to carry-on for quite some time before their brother can truly rest-in-peace.

The fact that Prince, an individual who has achieved phenomenal financial success, died without a Will, is proof that the lack of Will planning cuts across all socioeconomic brackets. Even wealthy people fail to plan their affairs. So what is it about Will planning that leaves people never taking the time to get it done.

According to a survey done in 2012 by LawPro's Title Plus, 56% of Canadians of the age of majority do not have a Will. The largest demographic age group represented is that of age 27 to 34, where 88% of Canadians do not have a Will. The most common reason given among this age cohort – they believe they are too young (21%). The irony is that the most appropriate times to engage in Will planning, whether it be for the first time or to review and update your Will plan, is when major life events occur. Despite not having empirical data to support the following statement, it is likely fair to say that this age cohort experiences many of life's milestones when one should think about Will planning – getting married, establishing a common-law relationship, buying their first home, or having children.

Another common reason given by Canadians surveyed for not having a Will (29%) was a lack of understanding about how to get started and the perception that the cost to get a Will done is something they cannot afford.

It is unfortunate if a lack of understanding about how to get started is really stopping Canadians from getting a Will. While there is some work to be done, it is no more than what one might do to get ready for your annual physical. You should get a family tree together, prepare a list of your assets and liabilities with values and think about what you want to have happen to your estate when you pass away and then when your spouse passes away. Your lawyer should then review all of this with you, while also thinking about any relevant tax planning that can be done.

With respect to tax planning I would encourage readers to avoid what I call the "cocktail party" chatter or the "over the neighbour's fence" advice approach. Engaging in any form of tax planning has costs and benefits. An assessment of those costs (including potential risks) and benefits must be undertaken before engaging in any tax planning. What someone else has done as part of their Will planning may not have been correctly done or, as I have seen too many times, it may not have been done with a real understanding of the risks.

In terms of the costs to get a Will done, like most things today – there are numerous options, at differing price points. Unlike many things today though, there is a real distinction, in my view, among the service provided in order to obtain the ultimate product. One can certainly complete a Will following the virtually no-cost-do-it-yourself approach or the low-cost but high-volume, piece-meal approach. Relying on either of these approaches must, however, recognize that its "buyer beware" as to the ultimate quality.

Or, one can take the time to work with a qualified professional advisor who knows what they are doing and, more importantly, cares about your family and ensuring your Will plan is done right. While the latter approach may cost you more initially, in many cases it will end up costing less overall. Should issues arise due to reliance on one of the former two approaches, the costs to address those issues will undoubtedly far exceed the costs of a professionally drafted Will.

Ultimately, as one commentator on the death of Prince has aptly described the situation: "It comes down to taking care of business. If you don't take care of it, you're leaving a mess for your family or the courts." Don't let your legacy for your family be one of a headache to add to the heartache. Get your business taken care of.

Significant Income Tax Benefits

Natasha van Bentum
Director, G2 / Give Green Canada

The federal government's department of Environment and Climate Change seems an unlikely partner in saving taxes, but its Ecological Gifts Program can do just that.

With the help of the program, Don and Heather Elliott have conserved a rare seven-hectare woodlot northeast of Barrie, Ontario into perpetuity. "Don wanted to protect a small corner of the world to ensure future generations could experience the same joy he had as a child while playing in the woodlot," explains Heather.

Since 1995, the Ecological Gifts Program (EGP) has enabled individual (and corporate) landowners to protect cherished pieces of nature by donating ecologically-sensitive lands to environmental charities or to government bodies. Many of these areas are of provincial or national significance, and home to species at risk.

The statistics are impressive:

• since 1995 over 175,000 hectares of wildlife habitat has been protected.

• more than 1,230 ecological gifts valued at over $774 million have been donated across Canada.

Habitat loss and degradation are the greatest threats to biodiversity in Canada today. Many key habitats--from marshes to grasslands--are found on private property.

Like the woodlot donated by Heather and Don Elliott, many important wildlife habitats are found on private properties such as cottages, ranches and farms. The people who own these lands can play an important role in encouraging restoration and stewardship.

EGP is unique in the world. It is administered in cooperation with numerous partners, including other federal departments, provincial and municipal governments, and environmental charities. EGP continues to provide a means of securing private land for conservation every year because of the collaborative approach taken by these partners and their commitment to improving the program.

Made possible by provisions of the Income Tax Act of Canada, the program offers significant tax benefits to landowners who donate land, or an eligible interest or right in land, to a qualified recipient.

Ecological gifts and the motivations behind them are as varied as the Canadian landscape. They range from corporations in British Columbia donating covenants over woodlands, to local citizens pulling together to conserve treasured coastal habitat in Atlantic Canada. The motivation for many individual donors is the comfort of knowing that their cherished piece of nature will be cared for and protected into the future.

However, as an incentive, the Income Tax Act (ITA) provides favourable income tax treatment for eligible gifts of ecologically sensitive land and partial interests in land.

Donors receive a tax receipt for the full value of their ecological gift that can be applied against 100% of their net annual income. Corporate donors deduct the amount directly, while individuals use it to calculate a non-refundable tax credit. Any unused portion of the receipt may be carried forward for up to 10 years, and there is no taxable capital gain on the value of the property donated.

As well, there is no limit on the total value eligible for deduction/credit in any one year.

For donors to be eligible to claim ecological gift income tax benefits, the federal Minister of the Environment must confirm that the ecological gift is made to an eligible recipient; and must certify the fair market value of the property.

Landowners can donate ecological gifts to eligible environmental charities that are approved by the federal Minister of the Environment and Climate Change, as well as to federal, provincial and territorial governments, municipalities, and municipal or public bodies that perform a function of government within Canada. Most ecological gifts to date have been donated to environmental charities aimed at conserving nature, such as local, provincial or national conservation groups.

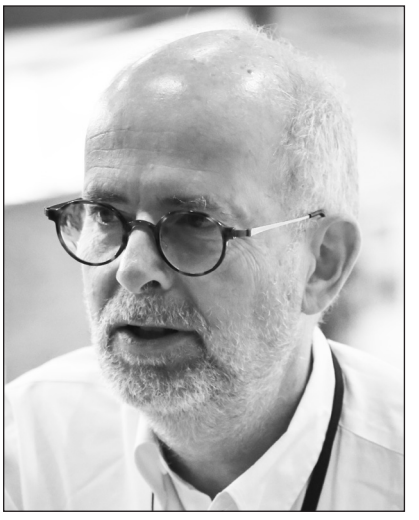

Environment and Climate Change Canada's website contains additional information about how landowners can leave a legacy for tomorrow and receive a tax break today.

"The income tax benefits of making an ecological gift vary greatly depending on the financial situation of each donor," says Karen Cooper, a lawyer at Drache Aptowitzer LLP. "The Income Tax Act requirements and tax implications of making an ecological gift are becoming more complex and care should be taken to ensure that all legal and tax implications of the gift are clearly understood.

"However, individual and corporate landowners interested in protecting nature by donating ecologically sensitive land, or interests in that land, to an environmental charity will, in return, receive enhanced income tax benefits in addition to the satisfaction of knowing that they have made a real contribution to greening their environment."

INNOVATION

Tim Draimin
Executive Director, SiG

From Margins to Mainstream

We have reached a watershed moment.

After a century of robust development of technological and business innovation, plus several decades of cracking the code of social innovation, the time has come to create an integrated innovation system.

Innovation has long been recognized as necessary for a nation's economic and business success. But citizens have relied on a trickle down approach for the benefits from technological and business innovation to trigger broad societal well-being. Unfortunately today's social, ecological and economic problems – ranging from preventable chronic disease to social exclusion to youth unemployment to climate change – are escalating in scale, severity and urgency. They won't wait for laissez-faire innovation.

The opportunity of the 21st century is to harness the combined power of social innovation and mainstream (technological and business) innovation.

Mainstream innovation is an advanced ecosystem of technological, business, financial and human resources wired to produce efficiencies, profit and, increasingly, disruption. Social innovation works primarily at the margins to take on the most pressing social and ecological challenges of the 21st century. Social innovation responds to gaping tears in our social fabric made more visible as aging systems fall behind or fail to use new tools like behavioural economics, human-centred design, collective intelligence, and both open and big data.

The urgent call is to steward a new collaborative mindset and approach. One that integrates today's tools and technologies with new knowledge emerging from across all sectors on innovation, social behavior, social capital, collaboration and networks.

The OECD reports that "(advanced) countries devoted more than one-fifth of their economic resources to public social support". It is estimated that 17% of Canada's GDP, or $338 billion, is spent on social outcomes. In the US, that figure is closer to 19.2% of GDP, or $3.4 trillion USD.

What are we missing by not having a more inclusive, integrated national innovation system, capable of producing greatly improved and robust social outcomes? How can we repurpose the large investments in social programs that are structured mostly to mitigate rather than solve societal challenges? How can we catalyze a purpose-driven innovation ecosystem?

The problem is that these efforts remain marginal to the scale of our challenges. Something more is needed: We must rewire the innovation system to include:

- Purpose: Solving grand challenges in the pursuit of inclusive prosperity and well-being;
- Processes: Integrated social, business and STEM innovation;
- Players: Public sector, business, civil society organizations, marginalized communities, media and academia; and,
- Guiding rules: New paradigms of collaboration and competition, new open and bottom-up principles, new forms of interoperability and sustainability.

This will require a new role for public investment, one that honours the vital role of government in market creation and driving periods of transformative change.

Economist Mariana Mazzucato, in her groundbreaking research on public investment, notes "…markets are 'blind' and the direction of change they provide often represents suboptimal outcomes from a societal point of view. This is why, in addressing societal challenges, states have had to lead the process and provide the direction towards new 'technoeconomic paradigms', which do not emerge spontaneously from market forces." Mazzucato identifies the role that government must continue to play as a key, and often more daring, partner of the private sector, derisking critical directions for market development. Recognizing government as a public investor opens up the opportunity to re-deploy vast resources (currently being spent on shoring up frail systems inadequately serving public needs) toward a common mission of integrated innovation for shared and inclusive prosperity.

From adhocracy to transformed systems There are exemplary cases of social and mainstream innovation converging to produce transformational social and economic outcomes, such as the Grameen-Danone Partnership, the co-operative movement, and the Toronto Atmospheric Fund. But we need to support a move from exceptional successes on the margins to a mainstreamed mindset of, and approach to, integrated innovation.

To succeed, we will rely on new agile innovation hosting platforms where business, STEM and social innovation can actively come together with shared accountabilities and support systems. The opportunity here is to build on local experiences, capacities and knowledge assets, as well as global insight, evidence and models. One groundbreaking Canadian example of this is Grand Challenges Canada, tackling global health challenges affecting the developing world.

In the near term, this requires a new narrative about the origin and the role of innovation, as a process that facilitates direct, not laissez-faire, public benefits. Aligning our innovation systems more tangibly with inclusive prosperity and social outcomes depends on shifting how we understand, value, practice and apply all streams of innovation.

GRADUATED RATE ESTATES

New Regime for Estate Donations

Elena Hoffstein
Fasken Martineau DuMoulin LLP

New rules introduced by Bill C-43, which received Royal Assent, December 16, 2014, affect the manner in which testamentary trusts are taxed, and change significantly the manner in which testamentary charitable gifts (gifts made by will) will be dealt with under the Income Tax Act ("ITA").

Background

Testamentary trusts have enjoyed access to progressive rates of tax and other benefits not available to inter vivos trusts. Progressive tax rates will continue to apply to the first thirty-six (36) months of an estate that arises as a consequence of the death of an individual and that is a testamentary trust. This type of trust has been given a new name: the graduated rate estate or GRE, as it is now affectionately named.

A GRE is defined as an estate that arose on and as a consequence of the death of an individual if the estate is at that time a testamentary trust as that term is defined in the ITA, the estate designates itself as a GRE in its tax return for the first taxation year ending after 2015, no other estate has designated itself as a GRE of the deceased individual and the deceased's social insurance number is provided. In addition it is provided that a GRE can only last as such for up to 36 months after the date of death of the individual. If there is planning that relies on GRE status it must occur within this time period, although early in 2016 the federal government announced that it intended to extend this time period by another 24 months.

What are the benefits of being a GRE?

As well as the progressive tax rates, the benefits that are available for a GRE and not for other testamentary trusts include the following: (i) the graduated tax rates apply to income retained in the GRE during the term of an estate qualifying as a GRE, (ii) A GRE can continue to have an off calendar year end (or fiscal period) unlike other trusts that must have a calendar year end, which allows for some deferral of tax, (iii) A GRE will be exempt from remitting tax instalments and is exempt from having to pay alternative minimum tax, (iv) It will be able to allocate investment tax credits to beneficiaries, and (v) there are significant advantages for testamentary charitable gifting that are available for gifts by a GRE versus gifts by an estate that is not a GRE, such as access to new flexible rules for donations by will and exemption from tax on capital gains on donations of publicly traded securities.

A number of preliminary questions have arisen with respect to the GRE. One of the pre requisites for a GRE is that only one estate can qualify as a GRE. In situations where multiple wills are used to avoid probate tax, the question has arisen as to whether this creates two estates or just one. It would appear that the legal profession has approached this issue in two ways. There are those who see multiple wills as creating two estates. Others believe that there is only one estate even in cases where there may be different executors of the two estates. CRA has indicated that, in its view, there is only one estate and that, therefore, a combined tax return should be filed and joint election made to designate the estates as a GRE.

Only an estate can qualify as a GRE. What then is an estate? An estate arises on the death of an individual and continues until the executors are in a position to distribute the assets to beneficiaries outright or to ongoing trusts which may continue for some time. Testamentary trusts established under a deceased person's will do not qualify for GRE status nor do life insurance testamentary trusts even if established under the will of a deceased individual.

In the case where an individual's will provides for the creation of a trust from all or part of the property of the individual's estate, the property may be considered property of the estate until the estate transfers or distributes the property to the trust or the duties of the personal representative in administering the estate are complete. In some cases, however, property in separate trusts created under the terms of an instrument, such as a will, will not form part of an individual's estate for income tax purposes. For example, a particular individual's estate does not include a trust created under the terms of another individual's will, such as, for example, a spouse or common-law partner trust described in paragraph 70(6)(b) of the Act for the benefit of the particular individual.

To qualify as a GRE, the estate must meet the requirements of a testamentary trust. Therefore it cannot receive contributions from an individual other than from an individual on his or her death, or receive loans from or incur indebtedness to a beneficiary or a person dealing at non-arm's length with a beneficiary.

Okay, so now we know what a GRE is. How does this affect testamentary charitable gifting?

In order to understand the significance of the changes that Bill C-43 brought to the testamentary gifting on death rules, it is important to know what the rules were pre-2016.

For pre-2016 deaths, the ITA provided that a charitable gift made by will (often referred to as a "Gift by Will") was deemed to have been made by the donor immediately prior to death. This was advantageous because it ensured that the donation tax credits arising from the gift could be used in the deceased's terminal return to offset tax liability arising from the deemed disposition of his or her capital assets immediately prior to death. To the extent that these donation tax credits were not exhausted in the donor's terminal return, a one-year carry-back of the credits to the year preceding the year of death was permitted. In addition the credits could be applied against 100% of the income in these years (not 75% as is the usual rule).

Canada Revenue Agency has issued many publications outlining its position as to what constitutes a "Gift by Will", and in general, requires that: (i) the terms of the Will provide for a donation of a specific property, a specific amount or a specific percentage of the residue of the estate; (ii) it is clear from the terms of the Will that the executors are required to make the donation; (iii) the estate is in a position to make the donation after the payment of debts; and (iv) the donation is actually made.

Under these rules, the value of a Gift by Will for charitable receipting purposes was to be determined on the date of the individual's death regardless of when the charity actually received property from the estate.

If a gift did not qualify as a "Gift by Will", it could qualify as a charitable gift made by an estate or testamentary trust. In other cases, a distribution made to a charity from a testamentary trust would not be considered a charitable gift eligible for a donation tax credit but instead would be considered a distribution made in satisfaction of the charity's capital interest in the testamentary trust and no donation tax credit would be available.

Donation tax credits were also available when a charity was designated as beneficiary under a life insurance policy, registered retirement savings plan (RRSP), registered retirement income fund (RRIF) or tax free savings account (TFSA).

The New Regime

The new legislation introduces significant changes to this testamentary charitable gift regime for the 2016 and subsequent taxation years both as to timing and recognition of charitable gifts for tax purposes.

Donations made by will and designated donations (RRSP, RRIF, TFSA and life insurance) will be deemed to be made by the estate at the time when the property is transferred to a charity and no longer will be considered to have been made immediately before the donor's death.

As well, the fair market value ("FMV") of the gift for tax receipting purposes is to be determined at the time of the transfer of property rather than the FMV at the date of death.

The legislation builds some new flexibility into the ability to use of the donation tax credits in respect of estate gifts by will and designated donations by permitting the executors or trustees of a GRE to allocate the tax credits among: (i) the terminal or last taxation year of the donor; (ii)the taxation year preceding the taxation year of death; and (iii) the taxation year of the Estate in which the donation is made and up to two (2) prior years of the estate.

It is only a GRE, however, that enjoys the benefits of the flexibility to allocate the donation tax credit among different tax years and most importantly to carry-back the donation tax credit to the year of death and one year prior to death which in many cases is where the largest tax liability arises (because of the deemed disposition on death rules). Thus, if an estate is to benefit from this flexibility, it is important that the estate attains and maintains GRE status and that the property must be transferred to charity within thirty-six (36) months after death.

An additional requirement is that the property to be transferred to the charity by the GRE must be property held by the deceased at date of death or property substituted therefor. This rule is important to keep in mind when contemplating post mortem reorganizations in circumstances where charitable gifting is also involved as the property to be gifted after such a re-organization may not be property owned by the deceased at the date of death, or property substituted therefor. It is also important to note that a borrowing of funds by an estate to make a charitable gift within the thirty-six (36) months will also not qualify for the flexible rules allowing use of the donation tax credit in the year of death or the year before the year of death.

Current annual charitable donation limits of 100% of net income for the donor's last taxation year or for the taxation year preceding the taxation year of death will continue to apply.

An estate other than a GRE will continue to be able to claim the charitable donation tax credit in respect of other donations in the year in which the donations are made or in any of the five following years.

It is also noted that the rules relating to the tax free transfer of publicly traded securities to charity will now be limited to gifts of publicly traded securities made by the GRE.

Any other changes?

The new rules appear to provide more flexibility for testamentary charitable gift planning but that flexibility comes at a price.

It will allow executors to claim donation tax credits for testamentary charitable gifts for five different tax periods (the year prior to death, the year of death, and three (3) years of the estate) as opposed to just two tax periods (the year prior to death and the year of death). It will also create more flexibility by apparently eliminating the need for testamentary donations to qualify as "Gift by Wills" so long as the transfer of property to the charity takes place within thirty-six (36) months of death.

The new rules also provide certainty as to when to value testamentary charitable gifts for charitable receipting purposes - namely, upon the date of receipt of property by the charity. This should eliminate the current divergence of positions taken by charities as to whether the value of the donation tax receipt is the value of the donated property on the date of death of an individual or the value of the donated property at the time the charity receives the donated property.

Although this flexibility and clarity is in large part welcome, it will provide extra pressures on executors of estates. Executors will need to ensure that estate property is transferred to charities within thirty-six (36) months after death in order to qualify for the ability to allocate donation tax credits in the year of death or the year prior to death. This thirty-six (36) month period may be difficult to meet if: (i) the estate is involved in litigation (Family Law Act claims, dependent relief claims, will challenges), (ii) the estate's assets are illiquid (real estate, private company shares), (iii) the donation is made after the death of a life tenant (under current rule such gifts would be claimed in the year of death if the life estate qualified as a charitable remainder trust (no right to encroach on capital during life tenant's lifetime). Moreover, even in ordinary circumstances, if the value of estate property increases or decreases following death, then depending upon the tax outcomes, executors could be criticized for either moving too quickly or waiting too long to transfer property to charities within the thirty-six (36) month period. It is noted that there is no provision for ministerial discretion to extend the time.

CHARITY COMPLIANCE

Mark Blumberg
Blumberg Segal LLP

Ten Key Issues

A great deal has been written about legal compliance surrounding charities in Canada. Much of that material however, is highly specialized, hard to understand and sometimes esoteric. Here are ten compliance issues on which employees and volunteers can focus.

1) CORRECT FILING OF THE T3010 REGISTERED CHARITY INFORMATION RETURN FORM

The T3010 is due six months after the charity's year-end. Failure to file the T3010 within a few months of that date will result in a charity being deregistered and losing its charitable status, and consequently also losing its receipting privileges. It is important that Directors record the date on which their returns are due and ensure that the address the CRA has on file is current. Otherwise, CRA reminder notices may never arrive and a charity may be deregistered without any notification.

The 2012 Budget gave CRA the power to suspend a charity's ability to issue receipts if the charity files an incomplete or inaccurate T3010 form.

2) COMPLIANCE WITH THE FUNDRAISING GUIDANCE

Canadian charities must be careful to abide by their legal and ethical obligations when they conduct any fundraising activities. In 2012, CRA released a revised Guidance on Fundraising by Registered Charities.

Some of the limits on fundraising activities include any activities that are considered illegal, deceptive, or provide too much private benefit. The CRA will look at many factors including but not limited to resources devoted to fundraising relative to charitable programs; fundraising without an identifiable use or need; the charity's fundraising expenses to fundraising revenue ratio; inappropriate purchasing or staffing practices; activities where most of the gross revenues go to contracted non-charitable parties; commission-based fundraiser remuneration; misrepresentations in fundraising solicitations or in disclosure of fundraising costs, revenues or practices; and fundraising initiatives or arrangements that are not well documented. CRA understands that all charities are different and when reviewing the fundraising activities of a charity, they will consider the size of the charity, causes with limited appeal, long-term donor development programs and whether a charity is involved with gaming activities. It is important that a charity's fundraising program and its costs are transparent, accountable and properly disclosed to CRA and the public.

If fundraising is conducted by third parties, charities should not fall into the trap of entering what are claimed to be 'standard form' or 'boilerplate' fundraising agreements.

3) PROPER ISSUANCE OF OFFICIAL DONATION RECEIPTS

Registered charities are not required to issue receipts. However, if charities decide to issue charitable receipts then they will need to ensure that every receipt issued is accurate and compliant with the requirements of the CRA. According to the CRA, when CRA audits registered charities it is finding that approximately 89% of registered charities are currently issuing receipts improperly. Many charities do not have all of the required elements on their receipts, or they are issuing receipts for services donated to a charity, which is inappropriate since 'services' are not considered property. Some charities make the mistake of "lending their registration" to other organizations, which is also prohibited. Even small mistakes in the form and content of a charitable tax receipt issued by a charity will be taken very seriously by the CRA. There are substantial penalties for inappropriate receipting.

4) AVOIDANCE OF ABUSIVE TAX SHELTER SCHEMES, FRAUDULENT RECEIPTING AND CHARITY SCAMS

According to the CRA, over the last ten years there have been approximately $6.3 billion dollars in donation receipts issued as part of "abusive charity gifting tax schemes". Approximately 1% of this amount was spent by these few registered charities on charitable activities and over 190,000 tax returns have also been filed as part of these schemes. Many of these gifting schemes involve a taxpayer receiving a higher tax receipt than the actual amount of their donation. For example, the 'donor' 'invests' $1000, but receives a $5000 donation receipt. Over 100,000 Canadians have also filed tax returns with what CRA refers to as 'fraudulent receipting'. In addition, there have been several other elaborate schemes used to abuse receipting privileges.

5) NON-QUALIFIED DONEES

If a Canadian charity is transferring resources (money, equipment, etc.) to a group that is a non-qualified donee (i.e. it cannot issue official donation receipts) such as a foreign charity, or a Canadian non-for-profit in Canada that is not a registered charity, then the registered charity must be able to show that it has direction and control over the use of its resources.

Failure to maintain direction and control can result in a 105% penalty of the amount transferred and/or revocation of charitable status.

6) NO COMPENSATION FOR DIRECTORS OF CHARITIES

In Ontario, board members of charities generally are not entitled to compensation. In fact, directors of charities that operate in Ontario are very much constrained in terms of their dealings with that charity. If there is an accountant serving on a board, the accountant and their firm are prohibited from conducting an audit or charging the charity for accounting services. Similarly, law firms cannot charge for legal services provided to a charity if one of their lawyers is on the Board of Directors.

Directors are only entitled to reimbursement of reasonable out-of-pocket expenses incurred to further the activities of the charity. Directors of charities that operate in Ontario generally cannot receive salaries, stipends, grants, honorariums, or consulting fees from that charity, without a court order.

7) MAINTAINENCE OF ADEQUATE BOOKS AND RECORDS

Canadian registered charities must keep adequate books and records at a Canadian office. The charity must also keep source documents that support the information in the books and records. The purpose of these requirements is so that the CRA can review the charity's revenue and expenditures and verify any official donation receipts that it may have issued.

In terms of records retention, charities are required to keep duplicates of receipts for at least two years from the end of the calendar year in which the donations were made. Most other documents need to be kept for 6 years from the end of the fiscal year. Some other records must be retained in perpetuity or until two years after the charity has been dissolved. This includes such things as "ten year gifts," minutes of meetings and all governing documents such as letters patent. If in doubt, keep it!!

8) AVOIDANCE OF UNRELATED BUSINESSES

Under the Canadian Income Tax Act, charitable organizations and public foundations can carry on "related business" that promotes their charitable objects. For example, a hospital cafeteria that provides food to patients and visitors could be considered a related business.

Charitable organizations and public foundations can also carry on other unrelated business activities, presumably to raise funds for the charity, if "substantially all" (the CRA says at least 90%) of the people involved in these activities are volunteers.

Private foundations cannot carry on any business activities whatsoever.

9) AVOIDANCE OF PARTISAN POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

Under the Income Tax Act, a registered charity can be involved in non-partisan political activities, as long as it devotes substantially all of its resources (90%+) to charitable activities. Any political activities must be related to the charity's purposes and must involve generally less than 10% of resources.

A registered charity cannot be involved in any partisan political activities. A political activity is considered partisan if it involves direct or indirect support of, or opposition to, a political party or candidate for public office.

10) NO INVOLVEMENT IN TERRORIST ACTIVITIES

A charity cannot support terrorism either directly or indirectly.

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL

LEAVE A LEGACY FOR FREEDOM AND JUSTICE

Rebiya Kadeer was sentenced to eight years in prison for speaking out against the persecution of the Uighurs, an ethnic minority group in China. After Amnesty International campaigned on her behalf, she received crucial medical care and was released.

After you have provided for your loved ones, please consider including a gift in your will to help Amnesty International continue to defend courageous people like Rebiya Kadeer who speak out for human rights.

With your legacy, Amnesty International will always be there to speak out on behalf of those who are being silenced, demand justice for those who have been denied it, and stand alongside brave human rights defenders and all men, women and children whose rights are being violated.

...brings hope to the next generation.

Did you know that arthritis is the leading cause of disability in Canada?
In fact, 4.6 million Canadians live with arthritis. It can devastate a promising career, destroy a child's eyesight and deplete a person's independence.

As Canada's principal health charity devoted exclusively to funding arthritis research and providing education, programs and patient care, The Arthritis Society is a dedicated advocate for the men, women and children who live with this disease.

The support we receive from individuals and other partners allows us to lead the way as the largest non-government funder of arthritis research in Canada by investing more than $185 million in projects that have led to breakthroughs in the diagnosis, treatment and care of people with arthritis.

With generous support through a gift in your will, or a gift of life insurance, a charitable gift annuity, or a gift of securities, you will support the next generation in their fight to end arthritis.

Your gift means new discoveries, hope for tomorrow, and a cure.

Purpose: For almost 40 years, the Canadian College of Naturopathic Medicine (CCNM) has been Canada's premier institute for education and research in naturopathic medicine. CCNM educates and trains naturopathic doctors through its rigorous four-year, full-time program, culminating in the only naturopathic degree in Canada. CCNM receives no direct funding from the government. Our financial health depends on the generosity of our supporters, who believe in helping us advance naturopathic medicine and research. Health care tomorrow can be better than health care today. CCNM is on the vanguard of this change, but to drive these changes we need your support. Help grow the future of health care in Canada: contact Frances Makdessian, Advancement Officer, fmakdessian@ccnm.edu

Votre passion pour les espaces naturels qui nous entourent est au cœur de votre vie. Et maintenant, vous pouvez en faire votre héritage. Un don testamentaire à Conservation de la nature Canada, quel que soit le montant, vous permet de contribuer à la protection de nos habitats les plus vulnérables et de la faune qu'ils abritent. Pour aujourd'hui, pour demain, et pour les générations à venir.

Purpose: Food For The Poor Canada works with communities across the Caribbean and Latin America, with a focus on Haiti and Jamaica. We are an interdenominational Christian organization that provides basic aid and sustainable development, empowering communities through five areas of programming: food, housing, education, health and livelihood. Food For The Poor Canada partners with a strong network of NGOs, government, churches and community leaders to distribute aid where it is needed the most and to strengthen the development of infrastructure in high-needs communities. We help create prosperous communities where children and their families have what they need to flourish.

Philanthropy and Estate Services

Provided by Scotiatrust,®
The Bank of Nova Scotia Trust company

Scotia Wealth Management™

The benefits of Integrated Solutions

The most significant charitable gifts are typically part of a Will and estate plan. Philanthropy is a key priority for those who would like to include charitable giving in their estate plans. Together with your relationship manager, we can assist you to integrate your philanthropy with your financial and estate plan.

Scotia Wealth Management™ is an innovative team-based approach to wealth management that addresses the entirety of your life—your family, your business, your future—one facet at a time. Together with your relationship manager, our Scotia Wealth Management specialists bring their skills and expertise to the consideration of what you've accumulated—and how best to administer it through life's changes. From financial counsel on managing your wealth to careful contemplation of how to transfer it to future generations, it's your thinking, combined with our thinking, to create Enriched Thinking.™

Philanthropic Advisory Services

As the largest provider of Philanthropic Advisory Services to private foundations in Canada, we help clients create meaningful legacies. With innovative solutions to facilitate charitable intentions, our specialists can help establish, manage and administer private foundations and donor advised funds. We provide assistance with planned gifts to individual charities that satisfy personal, tax, and philanthropic goals. Our services also extend to serving as Executor of estates and Trustee of ongoing trusts.

Our focus is on sophisticated and objective planning in support of true philanthropy. Through advice, service and working with independent lawyers, accountants and other professional advisors we deliver strategies that help balance family priorities and support philanthropic goals.

Aqueduct Foundation

Aqueduct Foundation is a registered public foundation (administered by Scotiatrust) with donor advised funds. Donor advised funds are personal charitable accounts that enable strategic giving in support of your various charitable interests. Through smart, flexible philanthropic planning, Aqueduct Foundation offers opportunities for tax-effective giving that is integrated into estate plans of varying complexity. Aqueduct Foundation's donor advised fund model offers unrivalled flexibility in the choice of charities and timing of gifts, including gifts of capital.

Aqueduct Foundation is committed to creating personal legacies that provide ongoing support for the donor's favourite charitable causes. Each legacy fund is named and designed to reflect the priorities of the founding individual and/or family. Donors are encouraged to include a short biographical statement to ensure their values and wishes are understood by future generations.

Will and Estate Planning

Where appointed an Executor (Liquidator in Quebec) and/or Trustee under a client's Will we can assist in developing an estate plan aligned with a client's overall goals. We will work with the client's lawyer/notary to create the Will and related documents, such as Powers of Attorney (Protective Mandate in Quebec) and trust deeds. We will maintain the documents in safe-keeping and periodically review the plan to help ensure it continues to reflect the client's needs and wishes.

We administer, settle and manage estates and trusts of varying complexity and value in our capacity as Executor and/or Trustee. In many cases, we work with designated family members to help ensure the estate is administered in a professional and empathetic manner. We can also assist Executors in fulfilling their responsibilities, providing support at a critical time, and can provide financial advice, practical support, and guidance to beneficiaries.

Philanthropy and Estate Services
are provided by Scotiatrust® in our centres across Canada.

SANDRA

START SMALL™

for the Love of family™

Miracle babies need your will to survive.

Every year more and more babies are born premature and critically ill, requiring specialized care only available in Newborn Intensive Care Units. These babies are born too soon, too small or too sick.

Remember the Sandra Schmirler Foundation in your will and help save the lives of newborn babies and create a legacy of hope and health for the future.

The Sandra Schmirler Foundation has given millions of dollars to NICUs across Canada to purchase state-of-the-art life-saving equipment for premature and critically ill newborns.

Our funding ensures NICUs are equipped with more of the latest technology. This allows Moms and Dads to stay close to home where family and friends can provide much needed support at this very emotional time.

If you would like more information about creating a legacy gift or have any questions, please contact:

...nourrir l'espoir de la prochaine génération.

Saviez-vous que l'arthrite est la première cause d'invalidité au Canada?
En effet, cette maladie touche 4,6 millions de Canadiens. Elle peut dévaster une carrière prometteuse, faire perdre la vue à un enfant et compromettre l'indépendance d'une personne.

En tant que principal organisme caritatif canadien du domaine de la santé qui se consacre exclusivement à financer la recherche sur l'arthrite et à offrir de l'information, des programmes et des soins aux patients, la Société de l'arthrite défend avec ardeur les intérêts des hommes, des femmes et des enfants qui vivent avec la maladie.

Grâce au soutien que des donateurs et d'autres partenaires nous apportent, nous jouons un rôle de premier plan comme le plus important bailleur de fonds non gouvernemental de la recherche sur l'arthrite au Canada, ayant investi plus de 185 millions de dollars dans des projets qui ont mené à des percées en matière de diagnostic, de traitement et de soins des personnes atteintes d'arthrite.

En nous offrant votre appui généreux au moyen d'un don testamentaire, d'un don de police d'assurance vie, d'une rente de bienfaisance ou d'un don de valeurs mobilières, vous aiderez la prochaine génération dans son combat pour guérir l'arthrite.

Votre don mènera à des percées et à la découverte d'un remède, en plus de nourrir l'espoir.

Pour en savoir plus, communiquez avec votre bureau local au 1-800-321-1433 ou visitez le site arthrite.ca.

Le don planifié, un don pour l'espoir

Planifier un don en faveur de la Société de recherche sur le cancer c'est poser un geste de générosité en soutenant une cause qui touche chacun d'entre nous.

Un don planifié vous permet d'établir la façon la plus appropriée de donner à la Société de recherche sur le cancer, et ce, sans atténuer votre niveau de vie habituel et celui de vos proches.

Voici quelques-unes des nombreuses possibilités qui s'offrent à vous afin d'appuyer le financement de la recherche sur le cancer :

- Le don testamentaire
- Le don de valeurs mobilières
- Le don de produits d'assurance-vie

Nous pouvons vous aider à planifier votre don. Communiquez avec notre service des dons majeurs et planifiés afin de connaître les avantages reliés à la planification d'un don à la Société de recherche sur le cancer.

"Unless someone like you cares a whole awful lot, nothing is going to get better. It's not."
– Dr. Seuss

THP cares for more patients, more often, than any other Ontario hospital.

"With 1.6 million patient visits a year, Trillium Health Partners has the highest patient volumes in Ontario. We are the ideal hospital to lead in health care system redesign. What we're doing in research, innovation, and medical education is transformational. Investing in THP is an investment in the future of patient-first care."
— Dr. Dante Morra, Chief of Staff, Trillium Health Partners

THP is driving real health care change and it's working. We are the fastest hospital in North America for treating heart attacks. The busiest Emergency Department in North America. The largest diabetes program in Canada. The highest volume day surgery centre in North America. The shortest wait times for radiation treatment in Ontario.

We are a new kind of health care for a healthier community.

Invest in the future of health care. trilliumgiving.ca

We are helping to end homelessness in Greater Victoria.

Your clients can help make it happen through a bequest or living gift.

John

In 2010, John was diagnosed with a mental illness that made it impossible for him to continue his sales career. Instead he lost his family and home.

Today, John lives at Cool Aid's Swift House and gets the help he needs to stay healthy.

Purpose: The Yonge Street Mission is a not-for-profit, Christian faith community that intentionally fosters transformation in the lives of individuals, families, and communities in Toronto that are most seriously affected by poverty. During the past 120 years, The Yonge Street Mission has assisted in providing basic needs and tangible support. Primarily serving the areas of Regent Park, Moss Park and St. James Town, our programs and services receive over 180,000 visits a year and offer food security, housing, health care, employment training, counselling and much more. "Changing lives. Building Communities. Transforming Toronto." This phrase encapsulates our goal to eradicate chronic poverty in Toronto in one generation. Now, more than ever, we must continue to join hands in order to help those in need move from surviving to thriving!

FOR DONORS AND PROFESSIONAL ADVISORS

"The Green Legacies Guide provides comprehensive information about the tax and financial implications of various types of charitable gifts. The guide is an essential resource for a person who sees the degradation of the environment as a most serious threat and wants to do something about it in the most tax-efficient manner. Although it is written for BC donors, most of the information is applicable throughout Canada. It should be on the shelf of every concerned donor and philanthropic advisor."

Dr. Frank Minton, Friend of CAGP Award recipient, author of Planned Giving for Canadians.
