FROM TERRY'S LEGACY TO YOURS

"It's got to keep going without me"

Forty years ago, cancer forced Terry Fox to stop his Marathon of Hope. Since then, millions of Canadians have helped build a powerful legacy in his honour. Terry never stopped fighting for people with cancer and neither will we.

Ask us how a gift in your estate plan can be life-changing.

Turbulent Times Prompt Reflections on Legacy

Welcome to the 35th edition of the Canadian Donor's Guide – your authoritative annual directory of fundraising organizations in Canada. I appreciate the opportunity to provide you this comprehensive reference resource and related editorial content to assist your respective responsibilities in the planned giving environment.

Our lives have been significantly disrupted over the past many months by a global pandemic and multiple societal issues. We truly live in a different world with unprecedented lifestyle alterations. How we collectively continue to respond and adapt has presented challenges and opportunities – especially in the charitable giving sector.

Our decision to go ahead and print this edition of the Canadian Donor's Guide while many charities across Canada are in a such a precarious position was not an easy one. However, we agree with Holly Wagg, in her article, "Rush Hour on the Planned Giving Highway" (page 24) now, more than ever, is the right time to be talking about legacy and planned giving. The COVID-19 virus has compelled many of us to face our own mortality and think about what we may leave behind.

Legacy is a recurring theme among many of this edition's editorial contributions. Megan Leslie reflects upon nature in her article and how this pandemic may give us an opportunity to create a "legacy of restoration" while Pat Johnson reminds us to include our pets in our estate planning. John Hopkins, a legacy donor, gives us all great advice on how to have a lasting impact in his article, "Why I Give." Natasha van Bentum's contribution introduces us to the trials our farmers are facing across the country and about the new ways they may be able to confidently leave their legacies in the hands of others.

Recently I attended a webinar entitled, 'Can We Even Talk about Planned Giving Now?!' presented by Paul Nazareth of the Canadian Association of Gift Planners. Paul said something that really stuck with me and has had me thinking: "Every Canadian has a legacy." I do believe these turbulent times have prompted us to think about our own legacy. Paul's article in this edition of the Canadian Donor's Guide speaks about legacies and how this Guide can assist donors and their advisors. I am honoured to play a small part to help "transform information into inspiration for donors as they consider what leaving a legacy even means to them," which Paul says is the Donor's Guide's "Superpower."

Speaking of legacies, I want to thank James Parks for his incredible 17 years of contribution of Charitable Donations: A Summary of Tax Considerations for our readers. James has passed the responsibility to Adam Aptowitzer, of the law firm Drache Aptowitzer, to carry on. Despite having large shoes to fill, I think you will find Adam has done a masterful job of handling this complex subject matter for us.

One of our long-time advertisers in our Professional Advisor section, Peter Bennett, provides his article from an "Advisor's Perspective" and shares how he works with his clients by focusing on their mission and values and to "help give purpose to their philanthropy." Imagine Canada once again provides information on their Standards Program and speaks about fortitude in turbulent times. We have included the Imagine Canada Trustmark on the listings of accredited organizations included in our pages.

You will also find some inspiring profiles from Fighting Blindness Canada, Sunnybrook and the Terry Fox Foundation. The common theme here is also one of legacy – of supporting and making planned gifts to those organizations that have made a difference in their lives in very personal and significant ways – so that others may also be supported by these organizations.

Delivering more than 17,000 copies of our publication to key decision makers and professional advisors in Canada's donor community every year is not possible without the relationships the Canadian Donor's Guide shares with the Canadian Association of Gift Planners (CAGP), the Canadian Bar Association, STEP Canada and Imagine Canada. We are so very thankful for their support and commitment to our efforts. In addition, we could not provide this Guide without the many charitable organizations across Canada who put their trust in us to bring their messages to their key audience – those charities who purchase advertising.

Thank you again for your dedicated support of the Canadian Donor's Guide as a valued resource. If you have any questions, suggestions or enhancements, feel free to contact me directly. May the Guide always be helpful in your endeavours to easily and effectively match donors with charities.

Every Canadian has a legacy. We trust this Guide will help donors find charities that mirror donors' own passions, beliefs, values and aspirations.

CHARITABLE DONATIONS

A Summary of Tax Considerations

Adam Aptowitzer
Drache Aptowitzer LLP

INTRODUCTION[1]

It is a peculiar result of history that regulation of charities in Canada is part of the Income Tax Act (ITA).One of the unintended consequences of this placement is that the regulation of charities fits primarily within an income tax context. So, donations are incentivized through the use of income tax mechanisms, and sanction against charities is framed as the revocation of the special status which provides them with their umbrella of privileges. This means that both charities and their supporters cannot fully understand their options for supporting a particular charitable aim without understanding the incentives of donating to charity and the limitations in charitable operations.

QUALIFIED DONEES

It bears mentioning that government has extended the benefits given to charities to certain other entities known as qualified donees. They include:

- Registered Canadian Amateur Athletic Associations;
- Certain organizations that provide low cost housing for the aged;
- Most municipalities;
- Certain municipal or public bodies performing a function of government in Canada;
- Registered National Arts Service Organizations
- Certain foreign charities that have received a gift from the federal government;
- The federal and provincial governments;
- The United Nations and its agencies; and
- Registered Journalism Organizations.

INCENTIVES

As the incentives for donating are primarily tax based, one should have a basic understanding of the tax system to appreciate the value of the inducement. There are two fundamental aspects of Canada's tax system to keep in mind. The first is that Canadians are taxed progressively. That is, the first chunk of income (a bracket) is taxed at a low percentage, the next chunk at a higher rate, and so on. The second rule to understand is that after a Canadian adds up their entire income there are certain subtractions that are made which reduce the total amount of tax that is paid to the government. Those that are made prior to the application of the tax rate are called deductions; those that are made after are called credits.

Tax donations are treated as either donations or credits depending upon who makes the donation. If the donations are made by corporations, the donor entity can deduct the amount of the donation from its income prior to the application of the appropriate tax rate(s) to its income bracket(s). On the other hand when donations are made by individuals, the amount of the donation is multiplied by the appropriate federal percentage and deducted from federal tax, and the same procedure is conducted in each province at their rates. The product of these calculations is then deducted from the tax owing.

The tax credit itself is determined by multiplying the first $200 by the lowest combined federal/provincial rate in the appropriate province (except Alberta), and multiplying everything over $200 by the designated rate (in most Canadian jurisdictions the highest rate provincial rate). The table on the facing page (Table A) illustrates the tax credits available for donations of $1,200 in the different provinces.

To simplify the discussion, we will make two assumptions. First, unless otherwise stated, the donor holds the items to be donated as capital property. Second, we will assume a credit rate of 46%.

DONATIONS OF CASH

Donations of cash are fairly straightforward. The charity simply receipts the face value of the amount donated. (This does not apply to currency held for collection purposes). Depending on the province and the donor's tax bracket, the tax credits generated from the donation would offset the tax owing on the income earned, so no tax would be payable on the money earned – and then donated. At lower income brackets, and in Alberta, the credits would actually more than offset the tax owing and the donor would be able to shelter other income from tax with the credits earned from this donation. If the donor is donating cash that is not income to them in the year donating, the credit could be used to offset taxes owing from other sources. But, in those provinces where the tax rate is higher than the credit rate on donations, the donor could still be paying tax on a dollar given to charity!

PUBLIC SECURITIES

Canada levies tax on 50 percent of the appreciation in value of a capital good. The tax is levied when the item is disposed of (i.e. sold, given away or donated). However, the ITA does contain an exemption for publicly-listed securities (on certain exchanges) donated to charity[6]. Moreover, the donor continues to receive a donation tax receipt equal to the fair market value of the shares donated. Thus, there is no tax on the donation, but the donor still receives a tax credit equal to the fair market value of the donation.

While shares of publicly-traded corporations are the most popular form of security to be donated to charity, there are a variety of other sophisticated financial securities that may also be donated. Examples include: exchange-traded funds, index funds, hedge funds, warrants, rights, and put and call options. As long as these products qualify as publicly-traded securities, they will qualify for the special tax treatment accorded donations of this type.

Example:

Assume that Kirk lives in Ontario and buys one share of a high-tech company for $1.00. Over time, the share rises in value and may even split once or more than once. After ten years, with all splits factored in, Kirk owns shares worth a total of $100. If Kirk were to sell the share he would have a capital gain of $99 (i.e. the fair market value of $100, less the cost of $1). Applying the capital gains inclusion rate of 50%, only $47.50 would be taxable. Further applying a tax rate of 46%, the amount of tax payable would be $21.85. Thus, if Kirk sells the shares, he is left with after-tax income of $78.15 (i.e. $100 - $21.85).

Conversely, let's say Kirk decides he wants to donate his shares instead of selling them. In this case, Kirk has no tax to pay and of course, receives no income from the sale of the share. He does however receive a tax receipt for $100, which will offset $46 of taxes due from other sources. So, assuming Kirk is paying tax on income from other sources, the actual after-tax cost of this donation is $54.

FLOW-THROUGH SHARES

For income tax purposes, the cost of such a share is deemed to be zero. So, even if the buyer buys the share at $10.00 and sells it at $8.00, the share is still assumed to have gained $8.00 in value and is therefore taxed on an $8.00 capital gain even though it actually lost $2.00. (Don't worry about the shareholder though, ownership of the share gave her access to a deduction making it worthwhile). Flow-through shares are like any other asset and can be donated to charity. When these shares are publicly traded, there is no tax on the capital gain (see below). However, for purposes of donation, the law considers the amount of the purchase price to be a capital gain and only the amount in excess of that (if there is any) to be eligible for the capital gains exemption.

STOCK OPTIONS

The 2019 budget introduced changes to limit the favorable tax treatment of stock options in large 'mature' corporations. An employee who exercises a stock option (i.e. buys it at less than fair market value) receives a benefit equal to the difference between the purchase price (and any amounts they may have paid for the option) and the fair market value at the time of purchase. Tax is calculated based on the amount of this benefit. In certain circumstances, the employee can claim a deduction against the stock option benefit so only 50% of the benefit is taxable. If an employee stock option is exercised and marketable securities are donated within 30 days after the option is exercised and if certain other conditions are met, only 25% of the benefit is taxable.

Individuals who make qualifying donations of marketable securities acquired through such stock options are not required to report any of the benefit. And if the shares are traded on a public exchange then their donation is treated as the donation of other publicly listed shares as described previously.

PRIVATE SECURITIES

The donation of securities of private corporations is dealt with in one of two ways; either the gifts are "excepted," or they are not. An excepted gift is a share donated to a charitable organization or public foundation where the donor deals at arm's length with the charity's directors/trustees, officers, and other like officials. In these circumstances the gift is treated as any other gift of capital in which there is no special tax treatment for the donation (i.e. the donor pays tax on the on the disposition).

In cases where the gift has been donated to a private foundation or to a public charity to which the donor is related, the gift is not considered "made" until one of two things happen: either the item donated must cease to be a non-qualifying security (e.g. the corporation is no longer controlled by the donor, or the corporation becomes publicly listed), or the charity has disposed of the security within five years of receiving the donation. The fair market value of the gift is then the lesser of:

- the value of the security when transferred to the charity,
- and the value of the security when the gift is deemed to have been made.

Note that the donor does not have to include any capital gain in their income before the shares are sold by the charity, so that the donor is not paying tax in advance of receiving the receipt. If the charity does not sell the shares within five years, the donor will not receive a receipt and the gain will never be taxable.

RRSPs/RRIFs

People may find that they have more than enough money in their RRSPs once they get to a certain age, and are willing to make donations in their lifetime in order to see the fruits of those donations while they are still alive. The RRSP rules do allow for withdrawals from the plan, but upon withdrawal the institution that holds the account (usually a bank) is required to withhold certain amounts. These amounts, on a per withdrawal basis (i.e. not cumulatively for the year), are:

- 10% (5% in Québec) on withdrawals up to $5,000
- 20% (10% in Québec) on withdrawals between $5,001 - $15,000
- 30% (15% in Québec) on withdrawals of more than $15,000.

The amounts withdrawn are claimed as income to the owner of the RRSP in the year withdrawn, and tax is paid at the owner's marginal rate. Thus, if a potential donor wants to donate $50,000 and has that money in his or her RRSP, a withdrawal of $50,000 would give the potential donor outside of Québec $35,000 cash to donate. The remaining thirty percent ($15,000 in this case) would be remitted to the government by the bank and credited as income tax already paid when the donor files his or her tax returns for that year.

A donor may also wish to donate his or her RRSP or RRIF upon death. There are two ways to do this. One way is to list the charity as a beneficiary of the RRSP in the donor's Will. The other way is to make use of the direct beneficiary election, which is signed when the RRSP is first opened (and can usually be changed at will). If the first method is used, the RRSP will fall into the donor's general estate before passing on to the charity. Under the second method, the RRSP will automatically become the property of the charity without going through the estate. The advantage of using the RRSP direct beneficiary election is that the RRSP will not pass through probate. When a Will is probated, the various provinces charge different amounts of tax on the total value of assets passed on in the Will. Thus, the amount of money in an RRSP is added to the other assets and a portion is taken by the government before any of the assets are passed on.

INSURANCE

Sometimes an insurance policy becomes superfluous. If the policy is unnecessary the donor may decide to donate it to charity. From a tax perspective, the donor of a life insurance policy will have an income inclusion of the proceeds of disposition less the adjusted cost base (ACB). An income inclusion is distinct from a capital gain, and effectively means that a donation of an insurance policy has no net tax benefit for the donor. The ACB calculation is rather complicated and takes into account the premiums paid, dividends received, and – for policies purchased after 1982 – the Net Cost of Pure Insurance (NCPI). Despite the ominous name, the NCPI is not overly difficult to calculate, although it will likely require professional advice from either an experienced advisor or the insurance company involved.

In a February 2008 bulletin, and later in another setting, the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) laid down certain guidelines for determining the Fair Market Value of a disposed-of policy. In these pronouncements, the calculation of the proceeds of disposition (POD) of an insurance policy takes into account:

- the policy's loan value;
- the face value of the policy;
- the state of health of the insured and their life expectancy;
- conversion privileges;
- other policy terms, such as term riders, double indemnity provisions; and,
- replacement value.

The idea here is that the value of a policy may or may not be accurately reflected by any cash surrender value held by the policy. When valuing the policy for both tax and receipting purposes, the donor and the charity must take into account the fact that the donor may be very ill and the policy may mature shortly after donation. A policy that would otherwise be impossible to receipt would become valuable to the donor. To do this, the advice of an actuary and an appraiser is critical to correctly valuing the policy.

The charity may either cash the policy and use the funds immediately, or pay the premiums on the policy and collect the larger death benefit when the insured dies. Of course, a very generous donor may not only donate the policy to the charity but also donate the yearly premiums to the charity. In this case, both the donation of the policy and the donated premiums would be receiptable.

ANNUITIES

An annuity is a contract under which one person deposits a sum of money with another in exchange for a subsequent income. It is basically the reverse concept of insurance. The income may be paid for either a specified period, for life, or for life with a minimum guaranteed period. Under the latter method, if the purchaser of the annuity dies during the guaranteed period, the annuity will be paid to some other person whom the purchaser had designated to receive it.

Although annuities are normally purchased from insurance companies or trust companies, life annuities are sometimes purchased from charities. Essentially, a person gives the charity a sum of money irrevocably in exchange for a promise by the charity to pay the donor a monthly income for life. The funds received would then be invested by the charity at a higher rate than it would pay to the donor.

For annuities issued after December 21, 2002, the donor would be eligible to receive a receipt for an amount equal to the excess of the amount contributed by the donor over the amount that would be paid at that time to an arm's-length third party to acquire an annuity to fund the guaranteed payments.

CANADIAN CULTURAL PROPERTY

The Government of Canada has set up the Canadian Cultural Property Export Review Board to certify which artwork or other item has cultural significance to Canadians. This not only applies to works with a Canadian aspect, it applies to any cultural work that Canada may want to keep within its borders. If the donation is certified and made to a designated institution, there is no tax due on the disposition. Thus, if the charity is hoping to attract donations of property with a particular cultural significance, it is important to secure the designation.

There are two categories of designation:

- Category A is granted for an indefinite period of time to institutions that are well-established and meet all of the criteria related to certain legal, curatorial and environmental requirements.
- Category B is granted in relation to an institution involved in the proposed acquisition of an object (or collection) that does not meet all of the criteria for designation, but which has demonstrated its capability to effectively preserve the type of property in question. More information on the designation is available from the Department of Canadian Heritage on their website at https://www.canada.ca/en/canadian-heritage/services/funding/movable-cultural-property/designated-organizations.html

The criteria by which the review board makes its decisions is beyond the scope of this article, but the board has published a guide on the subject available here: https://www.canada.ca/content/dam/pch/documents/services/movable-cultural-property/certif-guide-eng.pdf.

As a proper certification may involve many months of research, a request for certification should be made well before the donation is contemplated.

If a taxpayer donates certified property to a designated institution, there will not be any tax owing on the gift. In addition, the taxpayer is entitled to a tax receipt for 100% of the value of the gift (as determined by the review board).

INVENTORY

The determination of whether an item is inventory or capital is one of the most fundamental areas of our income tax system, but nevertheless is shrouded in vagueness and controversy. For example, to most people a house is a capital property. But, if the owner of the home is engaged in the business of buying and selling homes, the property becomes inventory of a business. There is a different tax treatment on the disposition of inventory, as 100% of the value is included in income (as opposed to capital, of which only 50% is included). Nonetheless, the donation of inventory will result in tax credits that will at least offset the tax due on the disposition of the inventory.

Example:

Spock runs a bakery. His business is not incorporated, so all the income of the business is taxed at his personal rates during the year.

After Spock has deducted all of his expenses, he is left with taxable income in the year of $50,000. If Spock sells one more cake that is worth $100, he will pay tax on that cake of $31. However, upon donating the cake, he will be entitled to tax credits of approximately $40 (assuming that he has already made at least $200 of donations). Spock can then offset the tax owed by disposing of the last cake and using the additional $9 against the tax owing on his other $50,000 of income.

Of course, as income grows, so too does the tax rate, meaning that there are fewer leftover credits. In those provinces where the tax is equal to or greater than the credits generated by donation (which is all the provinces except Alberta) there would be no additional tax credits leftover for use. In Alberta however, the credits will always more than offset the tax on the disposition of the donated item, even at the highest brackets. Given the number of provinces, the multiplicity of tax rates and brackets, and the frequency with which they change, it is impossible to include a comprehensive chart showing the tax treatment of all donations of inventory in this book. An accountant should be retained to calculate the results of any donation of inventory.

PERSONAL USE PROPERTY

Personal Use Property (PUP) is property that is owned by the taxpayer and that is primarily for the personal use and enjoyment of the taxpayer or persons related to the taxpayer. PUP includes:

- Bottles of wine
- Aeroplanpoints
- Air Miles
- Shoppers Optimumpoints
- Religious items
- Gift certificates
- Clothes
- Artwork
- Hobby items
- Comic books
- Model trains
- Toys
- Land (e.g. a fishing hole)
- Books

Normally, when these types of items are donated to a charity, the charity does not issue a receipt, nor does the owner expect one. This is, in most cases, the appropriate treatment. However, technically it does not have to be so.

The ITA specifies that for donations of PUP, the minimum cost is deemed to be $1,000. This is true regardless of the actual cost to the owner. The ITA also deems the item sold for a minimum of $1,000, again regardless of the actual sale/donation value. So, when taken into the donor's tax return, there is no taxable event on items that are worth less than $1000.

On the other hand, a tax receipt can still be issued for these types of items. The value on the receipt would reflect the item's fair market value. This receipt could then be used to generate some tax credits on the return (small though they may be). Charities should note, however, that valuing household items can be very difficult, and receipts should only be issued if value can be defensibly determined.

Example

Sulu bought a "Tickle Me Elmo" doll for $20. Shortly thereafter, it became a collector's item and the fair market value increased to $100. Realizing that there are needy children without a Tickle Me Elmo, Sulu donates the toy to a local charity. In return, he receives a tax receipt for the value of $100. On his tax return he calculates his capital gain as follows:

Deemed Proceeds of Disposition	$1,000
Deemed Cost	-$1,000
Capital Gain	0

As there is no capital gain, there is no tax payable. On the other hand, Sulu will receive a tax receipt for the fair market value of the doll ($100). Applying our assumptions (i.e. a tax rate of 46% and Sulu has already made at least $200 of donations), the $100 receipt will allow Sulu to claim back $46 of taxes owing from other sources.

The implication of this policy is that when items are donated which have an actual value greater than $1,000 but a cost lower than $1,000, the value of the donation will be enhanced because the amount of the capital gain will be reduced.

Example 2

McCoy decides to donate a model train set which he purchased for $100, but has it appraised in advance and discovers to his delight that it is actually worth $2,000. McCoy still decides to donate the train set to a willing charity, which issues him a receipt for $2,000. He then calculates his taxes as follows:

Actual Proceeds of Disposition	$2,000
Deemed Cost	$1,000
Capital Gain	$1,000
Tax	$230
Tax Credits	$920
Total leftover credits	$690

There are three notes to make about the type of property donated.

First, make sure that the property is actually transferable. While premium points are property, some plans will not allow you to transfer the points to anyone else, and so they effectively cannot be donated. In this scenario, a donor may consider redeeming the points and then donating the actual item. Of course, this may prove to be of limited assistance to a charity that all of a sudden finds itself obligated to use a plane ticket to some place it did not want to go, on a date it did not want to travel.

Second, both the individual and the charity must obtain a reliable valuation. From the perspective of the individual, an improper valuation could lead to a donation tax credit being disallowed by the CRA. The charity, on the other hand, has an obligation to issue proper receipts. So, if the receipts are overvalued the charity may find itself facing uncomfortable questions from the CRA.

Finally, there are rules in the ITA which prevent situations where donors are buying and donating items that fall below the $1000 threshold simply to create tax receipts to shelter income from other sources. While the charity will not necessarily be punished if involved in such a scenario, the donor could have the receipts disallowed.

LISTED PERSONAL PROPERTY

Listed Personal Property (LPP) is a subclass of PUP. It consists of certain specific items which are held both as an investment and as hobby items. The list includes artwork, stamps, books, coins and sculptures. Unless it is Certified Canadian Cultural Property (see earlier in this article) LPP has the same tax treatment as PUP.

REAL ESTATE

Generally, the donation of most real estate will be treated like the donation of any other type of capital property. If the item is inventory, the donor will be taxed on the full proceeds of disposition, and, if the item is capital, the donor will only pay tax on 50% of the proceeds of disposition. There are, however, two significant exceptions to this rule.

Principal residence

The first exception is the donation of a principal residence. Canadian residents are not taxed on the gain arising from the appreciation of their principal residence. So, if a donor bought his home for $100,000 and sells (or donates) it when it is worth $1,000,000, no tax will be payable on the appreciation in value (assuming the home was the donor's principal residence for that entire time).

If the donor were to donate the home to a charity, not only would there be no tax consequences on the disposition, but he or she would receive a tax receipt equal to the fair market value of the home at the time of the donation.

In some cases, it might make sense for the donor to leave their home to a charity in their Will. By doing this, they might be able to use the tax credits from the donation to offset the income from the deemed disposition of their other assets, and carry back the credits to the previous year. In both the year of death and the year preceding death, the estate can use the tax credits to offset up to one hundred percent of the income. Given that the deemed disposition of assets (with the exception of the principal residence) usually results in a large income in the year of death, the donor might, in fact, be able to do some significant tax planning in this way.

Environmental property

The donation of environmental property has a treatment similar to that of Certified Cultural Property. The treatment applies where property is designated as ecologically sensitive land by the Minister of the Environment (or a person designated by the Minister) and donated to any of:

- The Federal or a Provincial Government;
- A municipality in Canada;
- A municipal or public body performing a function of government in Canada; or,
- A registered charity that has a main purpose (in the opinion of that Minister) of conserving and protecting Canada's environmental heritage, and that is approved by that Minister or that person in respect of the gift.

In any of these cases, there will be no taxable capital gain on the donation.

We have described the specific tax treatment of items donated where there is no tax on the capital gain of the item in the sections on public securities and certified cultural property. The only significant difference is that tax credits generated from a donation of this type may be carried forward for ten years. The entire value of the donation is available to offset tax owing from other sources at the highest rates.

RESIDUAL INTERESTS

It is possible to divide ownership of the property during one's life (called a life interest) from ownership upon the death of that person (called a residual interest). Once the residual interest is sold or given away, however, the property will belong to the owner of the residual interest when the owner of the life interest dies. A donor might consider this course of action in situations where they want to enjoy the income or use of the property during their lifetime and yet donate the property to the charity during their lifetime as opposed to on their death.

The value of the residual interest is calculated using an estimated value of the underlying property at the expected death of the donor (in itself determined from actuarial mortality tables) using present value dollars. This amount will be the value listed on the charity's donation receipt. Determining the fair market value of a property at the expected death of the owner at some point in the future is a complicated mathematical task best left to a qualified actuary and appraiser.

From a tax perspective, when the owner divides the rights and donates the residual interest, the donor would generally incur a tax consequence. The tax owing will be a function of the cost of the right to the owner and its estimated value at the time of disposition. Generally speaking, this income will be treated as a capital gain. The capital gain is calculated according to a specific formula and depends on the gain in value of the residual interest relative to the entire property.

CHARITABLE REMAINDER TRUST

A trust is a legal device which effectively accomplishes one or both of the following objectives:

- It separates the ownership of property (the capital interest) from the right to receive income from the property (the income interest); and,
- It can separate the person who legally controls the property from those entitled to benefit from it.

A Charitable Remainder Trust (CRT) is similar to the donation of a residual interest in that it allows the donor to donate the capital of the trust now, but the charity does not receive it until some later point (such as on the death of the donor). A CRT is particularly useful in situations where it is difficult to record the division of interests on title (such as artwork). Despite its legal potency, creating a CRT is simply a matter of signing the appropriate legal documents.

When a donor creates a CRT, they dispose of the residual interest in the property to the trust and then donates the certain rights in the trust to the charity (the "capital interest"). It is important to note that the donation in this case occurs when the owner transfers the interest in the trust to the charity. Thus, if the underlying property is, for example, publicly traded securities, the gift of an interest in the trust will not attract the same favourable tax treatment as donating the securities would have; it is a donation of an interest in a trust, not of securities.

The special tax treatment assigned to different types of property outlined elsewhere in this chapter (i.e., ecological property, publicly traded securities or certified cultural property) likely makes them inappropriate candidates for this type of donation.

It is important not to create the trust with the charity as the beneficiary, because if the donor is not careful they will gift an interest in the trust with no property (and thus no value on the receipt), and any subsequent disposition to the trust will not be considered a gift by the CRA. The appropriate method is instead to create the trust with the donor holding both interests in the trust. The donor then contributes the assets to the trust, and finally donates the capital interest to the charity. Of course, the donor would retain the income interest for herself as long as is set out in the trust deed.

GIFTS TO U.S. CHARITIES

Individuals who reside in Canada and commute to their employment or place of business in the United States are allowed to deduct donations made to U.S. charitable organizations on the same terms as donations made to Canadian organizations.

There are, however, a number of other important conditions which must be met. Firstly, the commuter must live near the American border during the whole of the taxation year. Secondly, their U.S. employment or business income must represent the donor's chief source of income for that year. Thirdly, the donor must be able to demonstrate that the gift was made to a religious, charitable, scientific, literary or educational organization created or organized in or under the laws of the United States. Finally, they must be able to demonstrate that such a gift would be allowed as a deduction under the United States Internal Revenue Code. Where all those conditions are met, the donations in question are treated as donations made to a registered charity.

VOLUNTEER SERVICES

The ITA makes it very clear that only a gift to a charity is receiptable. A gift includes property or a right to property. Unfortunately, services do not qualify as property and, therefore are not receiptable.

GIFT BY WILL

One legal requirement of a gift is actual delivery of the gift to the recipient. However, where a gift is made by Will, such delivery is impossible until after the death of the person – sometimes well after. Under normal circumstances, the gift would not be complete until delivery is made. However, the law allows that where a gift is made by Will, it will be considered to have been made by the deceased in the few seconds preceding death, assuming of course that delivery occurs at some point after the death. In this way, the tax credits that are generated by the donation can be applied to the donor's year of death. This is particularly useful, as there is often a large tax bill owing on death.

The law allows for certain differences from a strict calculation perspective. As previously discussed, a donor is generally only entitled to offset 75% of their taxable income using donation tax credits in a given year. However, in the year of death (i.e. from January 1st until the date of the donor's death) the donor is entitled to offset up to 100% of their income, as filed by their executor. Any unused donation tax credits can be carried back one year, to the year preceding death, and be used to offset 100% of the tax debt owing in that year as well as the tax in the first three taxation years of the estate. One stipulation though is that the gift must be transferred (and accepted) by the qualified donee within three years of the death. Obviously, if the return for the year preceding death has already been filed, then it will be necessary to file an adjustment request in order to claim the donation tax credits.

BOOKS AND RECORDS

The Canadian income tax system is based upon the principle of honest self-reporting. Consequently, one of the most pervasive issues facing charities is the maintenance of proper books and records. The importance of the issue is underlined when it is understood that charities are usually in the process of proving their innocence rather than disproving their guilt. Without records, this is close to impossible. Indeed, if the charity were to appeal a decision of revocation of its status by the CRA, it would not even be entitled to give oral testimony. So, the importance of well maintained records is paramount.

What are books and records?

There is no standard definition of books and records. Fundamentally, however, an organization must have sufficient evidence to show that it is in compliance with the Act. To be clear, destroying evidence that an organization is not in compliance will not help the organization, as the lack of documents, in and of itself, is an offence. (Although the documents could be evidence of an offence with a more grievous penalty.)

There is a difference between the two concepts of 'books' and 'records'. 'Books' is not a defined term in the Income Tax Act, but is typically understood to be accounting records. A 'record' is defined and includes "an account, an agreement, a book, a charter table, a diagram, a form, an image, an invoice, a letter, a map, a memorandum, a plan, a return, a statement, a telegram, a voucher, and any other thing containing information whether written or in any other form."

No distinction is made in law between corporate and transactional records, but it is helpful to organize a charity by thinking in these terms. Corporate records are those documents required by law to define a corporation and its governance. They are often created with the co-operation of a government office, and are required so that the corporation meets certain statutory requirements. Transactional records are those created by the organization to keep track of its operations and meetings. They still help the corporation meet its requirements under the law.

Corporate Records

A corporate entity must maintain current copies of its constituting documents (Articles of Incorporation, Articles of Continuance, Letters of Patent, Supplementary Letters of Patent, etc.), bylaws and minutes of meetings or resolutions. Organizations operating in more than one province would also be expected to have copies of their extra-provincial registration.

Meetings

Compliance with the various corporate acts requires minutes of meetings of both directors and members. Members generally meet annually while directors generally meet more often – both should have records of all of their formal meetings. If issues are discussed at informal meetings it is a good idea to make records of those as well. Often, the fact that it had the discussion is in itself valuable and it would be unwise for a charity to self-censor its minutes.

Format

There is no specific requirement that the record of happenings at meetings be kept in any particular way for the CRA's purposes (although for purposes of consistency, groups may wish to follow standard processes). Therefore, meetings that simply have notes of what was said and confirmed as accurate by the bulk of the attendees at the meeting are sufficient for most purposes. Keep in mind that most corporate statutes do mandate that certain issues be dealt with by the members and / or directors and there may be technical requirements be met in the resolution.

Transactional Records

The vast majority of records held by a charity are its 'transactional' records. They are created by the day-to-day transactions of the organization and include its bank account statements, cheques, records of employee payment, invoices, statements of account, deposit books, etc, these are generally easy records for the organization to obtain as they are created by third parties. The challenge for most charities is to organize these records into some logical format in order that their T3010 can be produced at the end of the year. This role generally falls to a bookkeeper or some other individual prepared to keep these records.

On the assumption that the bulk of these records are being created by a third party, and that the charity simply needs to keep them, the charity will not face any difficulty in ensuring that its transactions are properly maintained. However, there are situations in which a charity faces difficulties because it is in a non-commercial or non-traditional setting.

Charities that engage in relief of poverty may find it difficult to track the expenditures with which they give alms to the poor. This can be obvious in a situation where the charity distributes food to individuals that simply need it or seem to need it. While the CRA is obviously aware that a charity is engaged in the provision of food for the hungry, it may ask how it can be certain that food is being given only to the poor and is not, for example, being distributed to the employees of the organization or being sold. While the CRA can be forgiving in such situations, it can, in some cases, be extremely difficult to ensure that records are maintained, to demonstrate that the charity's resources are being properly used.

Some foreign countries present another problem in that often the normal transactional records we would expect in Canada – say on the purchase of office supplies – simply may not exist there. Receipts and invoices are simply not used in some parts of the world. Charities should seek alternate means to track their resources.

Additional Records

Again, while there is no legal definition of 'additional records' these may include emails, or letters to the organization — and they may include records that the organization purposely creates in order that the CRA, if it ever looks to see, will accept as proof that the organization is properly meeting its responsibilities. Emails to and from the organization and letters to the organization must clearly be maintained. Charity officials should be careful to separate out their personal from official comments as an official may be unable to claim privacy over these emails. Moreover, emails between individuals may not necessarily be entered into the charity's records (say in a situation where they are not being saved by a corporate server). In these circumstances, directors should make sure to copy the charity so that the charity's obligations to keep records is met.

Creating Records

The organization may also seek to create records in order to show that it meets the legal tests involved. For example, to ensure that a charity's resources are properly used in a foreign country the charity may have the volunteer's make reports, take pictures or record videos that are not otherwise necessary. Obviously, a charity must first understand the legal principle that it seeks to establish before creating the record. On this point, the charity should seek legal advice before proceeding.

Fundamentally, it is important that a charity understand what it must show in its records in order to comply with the law should the CRA investigate. Continuous education regarding a charity's obligations is critical so that the administration of the organization understands when to ask for reports of directors or others in whatever circumstances.

Where must they be kept?

The books and records of an organization must be kept, by law, at its registered office address. This however, is often an impossible task because the legal documents may be more easily kept at a lawyer's office, accounting records may be with the accountant, and other records may be with the organization. It can be inconvenient and costly to keep all the records in one place – particularly if they are voluminous.

The CRA seems to understand the practical difficulties in this aspect and does not, as a matter of course, seek to confirm the particular location of these records. In the course of an audit, CRA auditors generally either ask for information to be provided to them or meet at a mutually convenient location where the records are produced. Nevertheless, we have seen instances where charities lose track of the location of their documents and so it would be wise for an organization to be aware of its records should they have to be produced.

Electronic Record Keeping

Nowadays, more and more records are either created in paper format for conversion to electronic format or in electronic format able to be printed at any time. Obviously, the CRA is as much interested in easy record-keeping as anybody else, and rules do exist for doing so electronically. These rules are outlined in two technical documents from the CRA, IC78-10R5 and IC 05-1R1.

An organization that keeps electronic records must be able to provide them in an electronically readable and useable format to the CRA auditors so that they can be read on CRA equipment (although not every CRA department will accept electronic documents). For most modern records this is not an issue, as long as they can be produced in PDF format. A regular problem is that the organization uses a bookkeeping or accounting software unknown to the CRA. However, as these records can often be converted from one format to another, there is usually a work-around. Electronic files can be encrypted, but the password must provided to the CRA if requested.

If a record was originally created in paper format and then converted to electronic, the paper does not need to be kept. However, an electronic record must always be kept, even if converted from one format to another.

The CRA does allow for the keeping of these records online in the cloud. However, their requirement is that the server be located in Canada or at least that a copy of the records be maintained on a server in Canada.

One difficulty that arises from time to time — and it does not apply only to electronic records — is the accidental destruction of records. With paper records this can happen in terms of a fire or some other disaster, but with electronic records the loss of a USB key could undermine years of work by the organization. For this reason, electronic records should be copied and kept in safe, redundant locations as much as possible. If records are lost, the CRA may seek proof or a reason for such a loss and may be forgiving in the circumstance. However, there's no guarantee that the CRA will take this approach, and you can assume that the CRA auditors have heard the "dog ate my homework" type of excuse more often than most teachers.

How long to keep records

Generally speaking, all books and records must be kept be for a minimum of six years from the end of the last tax year from which they relate. The tax year end is the same as the fiscal year end for the corporation, but is, by definition, the calendar year end for trusts and unincorporated associations. For purposes of the Employment Insurance Act and the Canada Pension Plan Act, the retention period begins at the end of the calendar year to which the books and records relate. Technically, duplicate donation receipts of a registered charity (other than receipts for donations of property, which may be held for longer periods of time) is two years from the end of the calendar year in which the donations were made – but it would be inadvisable for a charity to rely on this specific requirement rather than the general one.

The obligations above relate to the Income Tax Act, but it is important to understand that obligations also exist in the various corporate acts. Typically, Corporate Records (as opposed to Transactional Records) are not destroyed.

Who Can See Records

Outside of the civil litigation – in which a plaintiff or defendant could be compelled to produce documents relating to the litigation – there are really three groups of individuals who may be able to see various parts of corporate records. The directors, the members and government officials each have different levels of access to the charity's records – depending upon the circumstances.

What Language

The law requires that books and records be kept in either English or French. Organizations that operate overseas typically have records in another language, and while technically the organization should have them translated as they are produced, practically this is often an expensive task. Moreover, CRA audit procedures limit an audit to a certain number of years, translating every document as it comes through may be unnecessary for years that are not under audit.

CREATING A LEGACY

A track record of turning information into inspiration

Paul Nazareth
Vice President, Education & Development,
Canadian Association of Gift Planners

I sat there in my office, holding the letter in my hands – stunned. A non-donor had included a five-figure gift in their will to us and was inquiring about starting a monthly donation. I was 23 years old, it was the year 2000 and I had just started a job in a new planned giving role at a charity.

I had to pick up the phone to ask the donor how this all came to be? They had not donated to us before, we have no history of engagement – how do they even know what we do? What made them decide to trust us with their legacy and become a highly invested monthly donor?!

That call was the first time I heard about the Canadian Donors' Guide.

Our organization was one of the thousands in Canada who were part of the guide that year, which was given to the donor by their estate planning lawyer with the instruction to include charitable exploration as part of their 'homework' in updating their will as they entered retirement and a post-parental life.

The donors were active members of their faith community, weekly churchgoers who wanted to make sure that all they had worked for would help not just their children after they had gone, but would also build on the giving decisions and investments they had made in line with their values during their lifetime. Although they were familiar with many charities through past donations, charities who had interacted with their church, community and workplaces and the like, nothing felt fitting to them at the time their estate planning lawyer passed them the guide. They were so excited to find out about us and other organizations who they could give to and achieve the giving goals they had in life and beyond.

Fast forward a decade and I'm working for Canada's largest group of churches and serving millions of donors – and need to inform thousands of estate and financial planners about how to leave our charities in estate plans and who to talk to about major gifts like stocks. The Donors' Guide was the tool that was there for our charity at that time, too. The Canadian Donors' Guide helped us reach those advisors and their clients, and was responsible for not just bequests, but for helping us advance strategic giving in life, too.

Enter the digital age and I'm working for a Trust Company with hundreds of advisors with clients who are considering major legacy gifts but are often starting from a place of giving to a few charities each year. When it comes to legacy, most donors want to look at bigger picture solutions and often need a suite of charities to help them achieve their vision. The Donors' Guide was there for our officers to use when talking to clients about giving, without the officer having to endorse any one charity over another. The guide gave them the ability (in print for the many older donors who aren't part of the online world) to expand past a list of usual suspects to really dig into the places of value and impact for each individual client, often, starting a lasting relationship from just one conversation.

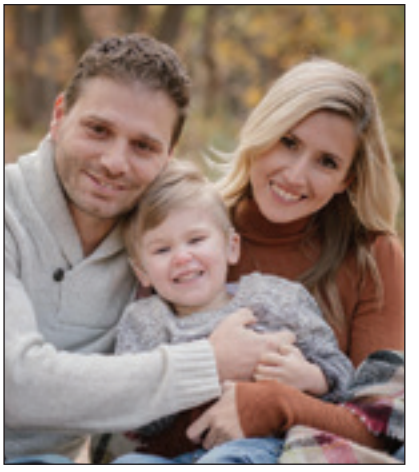

Information on causes is out there, Google can provide a million results in a second. The Canada Revenue Agency list of charities is online and is searchable, too, but it's the meeting of the minds and medium in the Donors' Guide that goes out to tens of thousands of advisors that has the superpower to transform information into inspiration for donors as they consider what leaving a legacy even means to them.

It's been an inspiration to me to see both as a fundraiser and an advisor myself how this simple yet brilliant guide has served as a tool for both donors and their advisors to hone in on which charity is solving what problems and connecting them quickly to have a discussion to understand how to make an impact on the problem and solution. There is strength in simplicity, and seeing people connect with the perfect charity that speaks to their purpose is a powerful feeling for all those who want to make charity more than just giving.

Today, 20 years later, as the Vice President of the Canadian Association of Gift Planners I'm proud that our organization and our members across Canada continue to collaborate with the Canadian Donors' Guide team to ensure that even as the digital age evolves - and

PROFILE

Diagnosed with Usher syndrome, 3-year-old Nicolas faces a future with deafness and vision loss

Being part of the cure for blindness

When Nicolas Celebre was born, his parents Steve and Jennifer had no idea that blindness was going to be part of their lives.

Jennifer shares their story to help raise awareness and funds for Fighting Blindness Canada so that one day Nicholas can have his sight restored.

As a parent, you only want the best for your children. Yet there are times when you discover that you're completely helpless.

When our son Nicholas was born, we discovered that he was deaf. Thankfully with the help of cochlear implants, he was able to hear at the age of 1. We thought we got lucky having caught the issue early. It turns out we were wrong – very wrong.

Soon after, Nicholas was diagnosed with Usher syndrome, Usher syndrome is a genetic disease that causes hearing loss, vision loss and sometimes balance problems. Usher syndrome is "recessive" which means that two of the same Usher genes must be inherited - one from the mother, one from the father - in order for the child to have Usher syndrome. Parents often do not know that they are carriers of the Usher syndrome gene because there is no family history of Usher syndrome. My son was going blind from a genetic eye disorder called retinitis pigmentosa (RP) and there was nothing we could do to stop it.

Finding out that Nicolas would lose his sight was utterly devastating. Even today, just thinking about the diagnosis brings us to tears.

Imagine being a parent and discovering your child is deaf – and about to lose their vision since there is no cure. It's heartbreaking.

Nicholas is only 3 years old and he's been through so much already. Yet, he remains a funny, bright kid who loves to make people laugh. I worry that may change if he loses his sight.

That's why Steve and I created "A Night for Nick," a fundraiser to benefit Fighting Blindness Canada. Our incredible family and friends packed a local Pub and enjoyed live music, participated in a silent auction, and raised some much-needed funds. The pub also generously donated 25% of the night's proceeds to the cause. I believe that we are standing on the brink of new therapies that could save or restore vision – and by raising funds for vision research with our friends and family we knew that we could help find a cure.

Fighting Blindness Canada funds research projects that will enable new treatments and cures for eye diseases. One such research project is the development of a new vision test for very young children, so they can receive sight-saving treatments to improve their quality of life sooner. As well, Fighting Blindness Canada is funding another researcher who is investigating gene therapy and its potential for restoring vision for people with Usher syndrome. We find this truly exciting and that is why we support Fighting Blindness Canada.

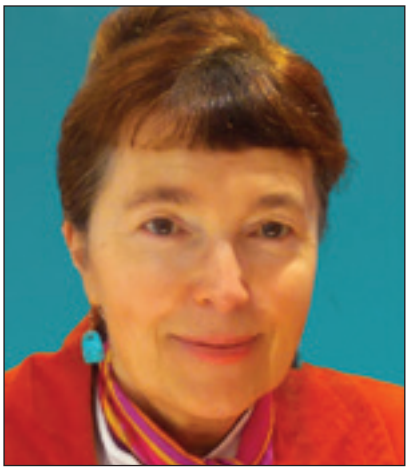

There are so many people like Nicholas who are dealing with vision loss and blindness due to an eye disease. I worry that Nicholas will soon lose all of his sight. Our hope is that other Canadians will join us in supporting Fighting Blindness Canada.

Fighting Blindness Canada is the leading private charitable funder of vision research in Canada.

You can help cure blindness for more than 1.5 million Canadians living with a blinding eye disease. To learn more about how you can support cutting-edge vision research, please see the Fighting Blindness Canada advertisement and listings in this Guide.

FARMING & FUTURE GENERATIONS

Natasha van Bentum
Legacy & Outreach Advisor

Farms, Food Security & Future Generations

Trent Watts grew up on a rural farm on the Prairies. His grandfather's brother, (both brothers were homesteaders) lived nearby on a half-section – a portion of which had never been under the plough.

Trent often visited "Uncle Tom". He has vivid memories of ice-skating on the big slough, looking for beavers with his cousin, and revelling in the sight of thousands and thousands of prairie flowers.

"Somehow that seeps into your soul and becomes a part of who you are. You don't know it is happening at the time," Trent says. "It informs a lot of what is still important in my life today."

In the early 1970s, Uncle Tom died and, to Trent's surprise, left him the farm in his will.

At first Trent rented it out for a few years. The kids liked to visit the farm, but he knew their future interests were not in farming. Nevertheless the farm was often on his mind, especially with those vivid childhood memories.

"I was thinking about the future. I really wanted the land to be farmed in a sustainable way, in perpetuity, and in a way that would preserve – as much as possible – the native plants and history of the land," Watts says.

Trent discovered Farmland Legacies, a registered charity based on the Prairies that holds agricultural land in trust and values sustainability.. Farmland Legacies acquires arable land through donation or bequests, and leases the land to farmers who share their commitment to regenerative agricultural practices and who will act as stewards of the land.

As a land trust, Farmland Legacies is able to offer stable, long-term leases to individuals or families. Potential leaseholders are evaluated on their agricultural background, aspirational goals and financial need.

Trent talked to his family. He explained he was thinking of transferring title of the land to Farmland Legacies. The farm would not only be protected, but continue operating as farmland by future generations of tenants.

"We all went to the farm, walked it as much as we could so that everyone understood what was going to happen. It was about being a good steward. We went ahead with gifting the farm to Farmland Legacies. It has been one of the best decisions we ever made."

Hurdles on the Horizon for Sustainable Farming in Canada

Across Canada there are significant challenges around affordable land access for food production, especially for a new generation of farmers. The global COVID-19 pandemic has put a spotlight on community food security.

Over the next seven years, well over 50% of farmers in Canada will retire. Yet the most recent Census of Agriculture (2016) revealed only one in twelve farmers has a formal succession plan.

As this 'wave' of farmers retire in the near future, large amounts of farmland will presumably change hands. Who will purchase this farmland? What will it be used for?

There are many questions for farm families to answer, such as:

- Are the children going to stay on the farm?
- If so, should complete ownership be transferred to the children?
- How will management decisions be made?
- Is real estate development and speculation encroaching on nearby land?

Adding to the difficulties is the increased trend for children who grew up on farms to move away. Many no longer want to carry on their family's farming tradition. But most soon-to-retire farmers want to see the land for which they have worked so hard, continue to be farmed.

Advisors have an important role in supporting farmland owners to achieve their goal of permanently protecting their farmland for sustainable long-term agricultural uses.

Land access is the most significant barrier for aspiring young farmers

While this disquieting scenario unfolds for so many farmers about to retire, across Canada today there is a groundswell of young people committed to sustainable local food production.

But aspiring young farmers face a host of problems, including;

- Access to long-term tenured land.
- Lack of capital to purchase land and/or build infrastructure.
- A steep rise in the value of farmland (Since 2007, farmland prices have increased by 132%. [Farm Credit Canada]).
- Speculation and development compound the problem by keeping land from being farmed sustainably.

Even if young people can rent or lease land, these barriers may limit their ability to create equity and longer-term security.

Despite the barriers, many young people are still keen to farm

Formidable barriers aside, many young people are working creatively to encourage farming in an environmentally sustainable way. For example, Young Agrarians is a farmer-to-farmer resource network.

One of its most interesting programs – adapted from Quebec's ARTERRE – is the British Columbia Land Matching Program that connects new and experienced farmers across the country. Young Agrarians also provides workshops and training through events, mentorships and apprenticeships.

Forging New Ground with Alternative Land Access and Land Tenure Models

While major challenges in the farm sector apply across Canada, in BC the situation is even more difficult as less than 3% of BC's land is arable.

Rising real estate prices and land speculation over the past two decades have compounded the problem. Farmland is being bought up by pension funds and foreign investors. As stated in the Senate Report, "A Growing Concern".

These pressures have resulted in some of the most inspiring work being done to ensure food security is taking place in BC, which is serving as models for other parts of the country.

Exploring New Models – Community Food Security

The Foodlands Cooperative of BC ("Foodlands") is a new model that supports community-owned land and shared ecological stewardship while recognizing, respecting and including Indigenous food systems.

Foodlands' goal – to place land in trust, to be managed by the community via Community Service Cooperatives – essentially removes arable land from the private market and ensures its availability for diverse farming, foraging and community-based agricultural activities.

Thus Foodlands addresses the problems of rising land values, non-farm use of farmland and speculation driven by market dynamics. It also works closely with Young Agrarians to assure new entrants into agriculture have long term tenure.

To achieve this goal, Foodlands Cooperative of BC seeks gifts of land and legacies of land. By holding land in trust, Foodlands provides a vehicle for current landowners to donate their properties and have peace of mind their land will provide food security for their local community in perpetuity, as well as helping farmers and community groups that are looking to support diversified, regenerative agriculture.

A niche is then created to protect land that doesn't otherwise fit within conservation trust mandates, in circumstances where individuals do not want to donate land to a public government body or where there is no municipal entity interested in holding and managing foodland in such a manner.

Farmland Easement Agreements

Farmland Easement Agreements are one of the tools used by the Ontario Farmland Trust in its mission to protect farmlands. Easement agreements ensure arable land is protected from development and are legally binding in perpetuity. In the words of one farmer who protected his family's farm using an easement agreement:

"I feel we owe it to future generations to ensure there is healthy agricultural land for farming. There is a history and connection here on our farm that I do not want to be lost. The farm is my family's legacy."

In Closing

A gift of farmland can be made outright during a donor's lifetime in their will, as a retained life estate or through various other agreements – often providing much-needed tax relief.

Gifts and legacies of farmland ensure land will be protected from development or speculation, help to maintain healthy ecosystems and ensure the land remains farmland for generations to come.

On a final note, let's return to the story about Trent Watts and the prairie farm he donated: Farmland Legacies has had the same tenants on the farmland since it was received nearly 20 years ago. Today, one of the sons of the tenants is also getting involved in stewarding the land, honouring the past, and securing the future.

Grateful Patient Helps Shape the Future of Healthcare

Jerry Krueger is grateful for the dual cochlear implants he received at Sunnybrook – so grateful in fact he has decided to leave a gift to the hospital in his Will to advance the science behind these innovative devices.

A small, complex device, a cochlear implant provides a sense of sound to people with severe to profound hearing loss from inner-ear damage. Unlike a hearing aid, it bypasses the normal hearing process and replaces it with electric signals that stimulate the auditory nerve. Recipients learn to interpret those signals as sound and speech.

For Jerry, his cochlear implants changed his life in many big and small ways, including discovering a newfound love for The Beatles only just a few years ago.

Since childhood, Jerry had hearing difficulties. "I got through school by lip reading," he says "and only got hearing aids after I married." While hearing loss has its challenges, Jerry always coped well, thriving both in his work as a property manager and in his family life as a devoted husband to his wife Marzena, and, father to his daughters Catherine and Victoria.

It wasn't until 2006 that Jerry began to experience severe ear pain. An avid diver, Jerry developed an inner-ear infection while scuba diving in the Cayman Islands. Visits to two physicians did not resolve the issue. It was only after seeing Dr. Julian Nedzelski, a head and neck surgeon in Sunnybrook's Department of Otolaryngology that the actual problem was diagnosed and rectified. At that time, 'Dr. Ned,' as Jerry warmly refers to him, told Jerry he was a good candidate for a cochlear implant. Jerry was nervous about the procedure, but he knew he was in good hands. The implant was a success and, after a year of therapy, he learned how to interpret sounds and his hearing really came into focus. Jerry received a second implant in 2013 — enabled through a lottery system at the time. That implant was a success, too.

Since then, Jerry has discovered a love of music in stereo, something he couldn't hear well before. For several years, he also mentored others who received cochlear implants. Today, Jerry feels his hearing now is better than ever. Jerry is clear: "There isn't a day that goes by that I don't benefit from my implants!"

Many times, Jerry has expressed his gratitude to Dr. Ned, who is now retired, and his current physician at Sunnybrook, Dr. Joseph Chen. But Jerry wanted to do more, so he decided to remember Sunnybrook with a gift in his Will.

Jerry has designated his future legacy gift to the area of cochlear implants. He wants his gift to help advance cochlear technology and enable shorter wait times for those who need implants. As Jerry says, "I know my gift won't affect me directly, but it brings me comfort to know I'm investing in the future of health care. It feels rewarding to be making an impact."

Today for Jerry, life is good. He is approaching retirement, enjoys time with his wife and daughters. He is a World War II history buff and continues to enjoy reef and wreck scuba diving as often as he can.

Working with Jerry to shape his future gift was simply an honour and a delight. Sunnybrook is enormously appreciative of the foresight and generosity of donors like Jerry who enable the hospital to continue to invent the future of healthcare.

GIFT PLANNING

An Advisor's Perspective

Peter Bennett
Blueprint Wealth & Estate Planning Inc.

I have been involved in gift planning for about 25 years now and am reflecting on a career that is 'on the back nine', as they say. Elsewhere in the Donor's Guide, you will read some excellent summaries of provisions of the Income Tax Act regarding gifts, as well as a technical guide to some of the gift planning tools I use with clients. What follows is my take from a planner's perspective.

COMMITMENT

I made my first planned gift using a small life insurance policy that my parents had taken out on my life. It was not a significant part of my overall financial security plan. I further leveraged the tax benefits by borrowing from the cash value before transferring ownership of the policy to the charity. That way, both the premium I paid and the loan repayments I made qualified for a charitable receipt. Here I was, in my early 40s, making my first planned gift. So why did I do it? Yes, there were some tax benefits, and yes, it was an inexpensive way to start my gift planning. But there was more to it than that. I was fortunate to attend an independent school, which would not have been possible had it not been for the generosity of two families who set up a scholarship fund to which my family could apply for financial assistance. Since graduation, I had acted as agent for my class, soliciting donations to our own class bursary fund. Not only was I paying back the generosity of those who had helped me, but I needed to pay it forward to successive generations. That was the first tool in my tool box. If I was going to ask a client to consider a planned gift, I needed to be committed to my own philanthropy. Since then, I have made another planned gift using life insurance, set up a Donor Advised Fund and made provisions in my will for other gifts.

PROCESS

Coincident with that decision was a change in mindset. My first approach to this market was to build a new revenue stream for my business. After about a year of unsatisfactory results, I came to the realization that if I was building a clientele of people whose values I admired, gift planning was not a separate business segment. I needed to be an integral part of all my client relationships. My process had to change. My second tool was process. I developed a process that sought the answer to three questions. What does financial independence mean for my client (and spouse)? What is an appropriate legacy for their family? What kind of social capital legacy do they wish to leave for their community?

DISCOVERY

Most advisors have some kind of discovery or fact-finding process they use. There are usually lots of personal details and financial facts. Here are some questions I would ask clients that can trigger some gift planning conversations down the road.

- Tell me about your (or your family's) hobbies or interest?
- Where do you volunteer your time?
- Can you name the top three charities to which you currently donate money? Is there a disconnect between your gifts of time and money? Could they be more closely aligned?
- Is there a family history of medical issues or premature death?
- Are you happy with the amount of income tax you pay?
- What kind of conversations do you have with your children/parents about money?
- Where does your wealth come from? Do you stand to inherit an estate? Where did it come from?
- Who are the current beneficiaries of your will?
    - Is there another beneficiary you forgot to mention? (tax on last death)
- If I could show you a way to increase the size of your estate and/or reduce the impact of taxation, would you be interested in pursuing this?

There are other questions, but my process is really a conversation about mission and values. In looking at existing clients, I often look for clients who are single, divorced or widowed or clients whose plans have 'estate' as beneficiary.

For clients with whom I have a long-standing relationship, I plot their lifeline in landscape format in the middle of a sheet of paper. The horizontal axis is divided into 5 or 10 yr increments. On the left edge, the vertical line goes up and down from 0 (horizontal axis) on a scale of 1-10 positive, and 1-10 negative. I then ask them to think of three positive events in their life and three negative, plot them on the graph and put a one word description beside each dot. I then start the conversation about these events by joining the dots on the graph. Going this deeply with a client is risky, but it can reveal some remarkable insights into their values and character – the foundation of further conversations about philanthropy.

UNCOVERING THE GIFT

GICs vs annuities

Mr and Mrs B Generous are 70 and 68 years of age. They have a non-registered GIC portfolio of $100,000 that they rely on to produce income or as an emergency reserve. They want to be generous, but they need the GIC income. As of this writing (May 2020), five year GIC interest is running at 3.45%. On $100,000 capital, that's $287.50/month. Net after tax, that's about $145/month, depending on your province of residence and assuming the top marginal rate. To produce the same after-tax income of $145 the Generous family could purchase a joint and survivor annuity that costs them about $36,500. Now, they've uncovered $67,500 of capital that they can donate to their favourite charities. But wait! All of a sudden $100,000 has disappeared from their estate. Will their children be left short? The Generous family uses the tax credit on the donation (about $27,000) and funds a last to die life insurance policy (Estate Replacement) that flows to their beneficiaries upon the second death.

RRIFs

Some donors are in the fortunate position of having accumulated registered (taxable) assets. When they convert to a RRIF/LIF, the added income may push them into a higher marginal tax bracket. They may not be in a position to make a planned gift with the income but they can increase their regular donations to increase their charitable tax credit. They name their spouse as successor annuitant but they can name or add a charity as a named revocable/irrevocable beneficiary. That designation will offset – in whole or in part – the tax impact of registered capital on the second death.

For some donors, the RRIF income is not needed at all. Rather than wait until age 71, why not amortize the RRSP/RRIF now? Using conservative rate of return assumptions, $250,000 of RRIF/RRSP capital will pay just under $30,000 annually, exhausting itself in 10 years. Assuming a male annuitant's age of 63, the donor applies for about $450,000 of life insurance with a premium of about $29,700 annually, paid up in 10 years. Ownership is transferred to the charity after issue, and the premium qualifies as a charitable donation, offsetting the RRIF income. At the end of ten years, the policy is paid for and, if return assumptions hold up (they never do!), the taxable capital is gone from the donor's estate.

Donor Advised Funds

Since I started using Donor Advised Funds (DAF) in 2005, I have noticed a surge in their popularity. Initially, I had a number of older clients who were getting bogged down by the volume of charitable solicitations they received. They were concerned about duplication in their generosity, multiple requests, unscrupulous pseudo charities and a lack of coordination in their philanthropy. They were also looking at their estates and wanting to update their wills. They were reluctant to make a bequest in their will because of the competing interests of charities. This often meant that no gift was made or their will wasn't updated. Their circumstances were changing as were their charitable intentions. Donor Advised Funds gave them the flexibility to make one bequest in their will, consolidate their annual giving using one charity and reduce the stress they were feeling.

To address the elephant in the room, using a donor advised fund gives the client peace of mind. My relationship with the donor often dates back decades. They want my continued involvement in their philanthropy.

For my younger clients, DAF allow them to start their philanthropy early. They know they can start modestly and change their grant recipients annually to suit their changing interests.

Life Insurance:

I have used life insurance as a gift planning tool on its own or as part of an estate replacement or income tax minimization strategy. I use new and existing policies. In determining who should own the policy, I am often guided by one question. 'Where is the tax liability?' That will help determine whether the gift should be inter-vivos or testamentary. When discussing their will, I draw a circle on a sheet of paper likening the estate to a pie. I ask them to name the beneficiaries and the slice going to each. I ask if they have forgotten a beneficiary. I then draw in the tax slice and adjust the remaining beneficiaries' slices. "Mr and Mrs Generous, if I could show you how to reduce or replace this slice, and possibly make the pie bigger, would that be of interest to you?" If the answer is yes, I have the beginning of a conversation about gift planning in their estate.

Securities

Planned gifts are usually cultivated from existing donors. For those donors who choose systematic (monthly) donations or who are long time regular donors, there may be a more efficient way to make the donation. In my discovery, I look to see if there are 'widows and orphans' stocks in their non-registered holdings. Four of our major insurance companies demutualized around the turn of the century. There's often a large unrealized capital gain in the holdings. The common planning technique is to donate the shares in kind to the charity as part of a major gift or capital campaign. However, what if my client gives to multiple charities annually? Could they improve their monthly cash flow and reduce the after-tax cost? I recommend they open an account with an organization like Canada Helps. Arrange an annual gift of shares that corresponds roughly to their current periodic giving. They stop their periodic contributions, gift the shares to Canada Helps and designate their charities to receive the same percent from the Canada Helps distribution. One tax receipt. Better tax treatment. Privacy settings can be set to eliminate direct mailings from the charities, if that is a concern.

John Hopkins
Terry Fox Foundation Legacy Donor

Why I Give

Like so many Canadians, my wife Helen and I were moved watching Terry Fox on his Marathon of Hope and heartbroken when he passed away. That a young man ran halfway across a country as vast as Canada on one leg was extraordinary. We were inspired and began a long commitment to The Terry Fox Run and to funding cancer research. We ran, made personal donations, and encouraged our friends and family to do the same. 2020 marks the 40th anniversary of Terry's Marathon of Hope, and I'm proud to share how this young man became my motivation for supporting a cause I care about.

I've lived in Richmond, British Columbia since 1967. It's where Helen and I made a home, raised our son and took part in our first Terry Fox Run. Later, it was where we first felt personally impacted by cancer.

Helen was a wonderful caregiver and began a career in nursing at BC Children's Hospital, and later at the hospital in Richmond when it opened in 1966. In fact, she was the youngest head nurse in BC at the time. I took on a career in the not-for profit sector and truly believed that charitable giving could improve our communities and even the world.

We were fortunate to spend many years supporting others with our contributions to The Terry Fox Foundation. In 1999, it was our turn to be supported. Helen was diagnosed with lymphoma, and so began our 12-year journey with cancer. Like many people facing a life-threatening illness, we wanted all the information we could get. Through our own research and conversations with Helen's doctors, we quickly learned how complicated and unpredictable cancer is. The number of treatment options were limited, and for many cancer types, there was a 'one size fits all' approach. After being treated for lymphoma, Helen underwent two operations for breast cancer and then melanoma of the eye which metastasized to her liver, which we knew was very bad.

Helen passed away seven years ago. She died in the palliative care facility she had helped set up at Richmond Hospital where she worked as Director of Acute Care Nursing prior to retirement. We were married for 49 years and loved each other deeply. I know that her final 12 years were extended and made more full because of the advances made in cancer research. Advances that would not have been possible without committed donors who support people they'll never meet.

Just like Terry Fox, my wife's chance of surviving cancer would have been better if she were being treated today instead of twenty years ago. Terry once said, "even if I don't make it, it's got to keep going without me." I believe that the future for cancer patients is made better because of what we learned from people like Helen, who were treated before them. It certainly was for me.

Four years ago, I was diagnosed with papillary thyroid cancer. After two successful operations, I can now say I am a cancer survivor. I know there were people with the same cancer who came before me and who were not as fortunate. I want to keep that momentum alive so that people being diagnosed in the future have the best chance of survival.

I was asked recently if I had any words to live by. It wasn't an easy question to answer, but I landed on "care, share, give, and receive". At certain points in our lives, we're the ones caring and providing for people. During other times, we learn to receive support. I've been through both stages and am committed to providing hope for people with cancer for years to come. After my family's experiences with cancer, we decided to make a lasting impact on cancer research. I'm proud to tell you I have left a gift in my will to The Terry Fox Foundation – a decision made with my family's knowledge, consultation and support.

I'm not a wealthy person but, at this point in my life, I have an opportunity to shine a spotlight on the things I believe to be important. For me, that's cancer research. This is a cause that requires vision and expertise. The Terry Fox Foundation's focus on collaborative research and precision medicine will benefit Canadians for years to come – something I'm proud to be a part of.

I urge you to think carefully about the causes that are closest to your heart and consider how best to support them. The staff at your favourite charities can help you and your family make a plan that will enable you to have lasting impact.

Thank you.

REFLECTION

Why we need nature now – more than ever

Megan Leslie
President & CEO, WWF Canada

As I write this, the entire country (and world) is justifiably preoccupied with coronavirus (COVID-19), a pandemic the likes of which has never been seen. While we grieve those lost, praise frontline workers and experience the challenges that come with isolation and economic uncertainty, it has also provided a rare opportunity to reflect on what matters most to us, our loved ones, of course, but also the soothing comfort that can be found in our relationship with nature.

In these times, I'm drawn to the beauty and vitality of nature and I know that many of you are also finding comfort and strength from the natural world. Nature captivates us, enriches our lives and sustains us. Throughout the pandemic, nature has served as our sanctuary, an escape from the anxiety-inducing news-cycle that plays on a loop in our homes. And we, as Canadians, have embraced it. In the weeks when our parks and trails were closed to the public, it became that much harder to cope proving that as much as nature needs us, we need nature, now more than ever.

Since our planet is tipped on its axis in relation to the sun, seasons have come and gone. Nature continues to follow its natural cycles as plants sprout and wildlife rear their young. While these natural forces may be greater than you and I, they still need our attention because increasingly our single species is altering life on Earth as we know it.

Unsustainable human activities are jeopardizing the future of fish, bears, whales, bees, caribou and other wildlife. We are seeing heartbreaking losses of plants and animals that scientists are calling a sixth mass extinction. And wildlife loss isn't only happening in far off places. It's happening right here in Canada. Our country is one of abundant nature. Yet the species found in our oceans, rivers, forests, icy Arctic expanses, and even our backyards, are under unimageable pressure from habitat loss and pollution. At the same time, climate change is accelerating this devastating loss of nature.

The challenges facing nature can feel much larger than any one of us, especially now. What keeps me going and gives me hope is Canadians' ability to come together when it counts and meet challenges, no matter how daunting, head on. Whether by marching in the streets to demand climate action or doing our part in the fight against COVID-19, Canadians have shown that we can come together to make lasting change.

And now is the time for change. We can't make a difference if we don't do anything different. We must seize the moment and tap into the restorative power of nature to build a future where people and wildlife thrive.

From Vancouver Island to Newfoundland and Labrador to the Arctic tundra, WWF-Canada has already begun identifying places with the most at-risk species and most potential to store carbon. With this knowledge, we can protect our forests, wetlands and grasslands for wildlife and fight future climate change at the same time.

WWF-Canada has a half century of experience fighting to strengthen and protect Canadian nature. Because of this support, sea otters swim free off Haida Gwaii in British Columbia, grizzlies and wolves roam huge swathes of wilderness in the Rockies, burrowing owls have returned to our native grasslands, tiger populations are on the rise, and narwhals glide through protected areas of our Arctic. With you by our side, we will continue to fight to reverse biodiversity loss and slow the rate of climate change. From safeguarding species in the Arctic and protecting important forage fish species like capelin, to advocating for renewable energy solutions, WWF-Canada is hard at work to protect the future of all life on our planet.

Our work is made possible through the generous contributions of individual donors, corporate partners, foundations and organizations. Every donation makes a difference and we are truly grateful for the trust and support we receive.

When this era is written about in history books – and it will be – ours can be a legacy of restoration. There are many ways to safeguard the future for wildlife and wild places. One way that people can extend their love and support for nature into the future is to include a gift in their Will for wildlife. By embracing this transformative moment, we can safeguard the future of wildlife and leave a more beautiful, healthier world to the next generation. By supporting WWF-Canada, you are helping build a future in which people and nature thrive.

Megan Leslie is the president and CEO of World Wildlife Fund Canada.

GIFT PLANNING IN A PANDEMIC

Rush Hour on the Planned Giving Freeway

Holly Wagg
Managing Partner and Head Counsel,
Good Works

There's a new word in the legacy giving marketplace – and it's a word we've never used before when referring to the process of gift planning.

That word is URGENCY.

That's right, URGENCY.

The Old Word Was 'Patience'.

Fundraisers of almost all stripes are taught to use urgency as a motivator to give. Direct response fundraising, in particular, loves to use phrases like 'give now' or 'donate today' to compel an immediate response.

Gift planners, on the other hand, have always had to work a different magic. The brain research of Dr. Russell James has taught us to tap into the autobiographical brain. Which, when translated into best practice, has been to be unhurried, to go at the prospect's pace and to let gifts bloom over time.

Think of it from the fundraiser's point of view: We have always counseled our clients to see legacy gift marketing as an old-fashioned courtship. Take gradual, patient steps. Don't rush. Suggest, don't push. Keep sending donors repeated legacy messages over time (and by that, we mean years) like gentle raindrops on a roof. And, before this pandemic shook our world, this was all very good (donor-centered!) advice.

Think of it from the legacy donor's point of view: We have always encouraged our clients to accept that donors can take 3-5 years from the moment they first think of making a planned gift to the moment they decide they're going to do it. And then, they can take another 3-5 years from the moment they mentally commit to the moment they either sign or update their will. Smart charities – before COVID-19 that is – saw planned giving fundraising as a very long-term process.

A World Turned Upside Down

To go back to the rush hour metaphor, most of us have always seen our planned giving programs as a steady journey along a slow-moving factory conveyor belt. We pace and plan both our moves and messages in an unobtrusive and subtle manner so as to dance around a subject as sensitive as death.

Well, the tide has turned – and your donors have turned it. A lot of Canadians (and a lot of people worldwide) are now in a hurry to get their affairs in order. They're facing their own mortality and death head-on.

Why the Rush?

As many of us already know, death is a subject that the brain likes to avoid. We all know all sorts of people – especially those under 65 – who have wonderful intentions of making wills and charitable bequests. But, they take their sweet time getting around to it.

This pandemic has put our mortality in our faces in a way that most of us have never experienced before. Many of us are actually afraid we could die from COVID-19, and we want to make sure that our loved ones are provided for should we not be around much longer.

So what has actually changed?

Canadians are rushing to their lawyers to make and/or update an existing will.

Will Making in the time of COVID-19

My fellow Good Workers and I heard about this will-making rush from clients, colleagues, allied professionals and then news outlets, in the early weeks of the pandemic in both Canada and the U.S.

In a straw poll-type survey of lawyers conducted by Good Works – and thanks to the invaluable help of our friends at the Canadian Association of Gift Planners – we found that:

- Almost 70% of Canadian lawyer respondents report that they're getting a lot more or somewhat more estate planning business since the pandemic struck. And when asked about the motivator for this increase, only a quarter of respondents felt that more than 50% of this activity was significantly driven by the Coronavirus pandemic (remember, most will-making happens because of changes to wealth, health or family status).
- The estate planning traffic includes those making new wills (41%), those who are updating an existing will (35%) and those signing off on a will they had started drafting before COVID-19.

ESTATE PLANNING INCLUDES PETS

Ensure Companion Animals are Part of the Plan

RAPS CEO Eyal Lichtmann and his dog Levi

At the heart of estate planning is caring for people — self-care, in the form of establishing your directives, and leaving provisions for the people you love.

For two out of three Canadians – who include a companion animal among their loved ones – planning for their well-being when we are no longer able to care for them should also be part of the planning process.

Many people are shocked at the amount of money that animal care professionals recommend being set aside for such an instance. The reality is that most people spend money on their pets in comparatively small amounts – canned food, kibble, cat litter, flea and worm medications, routine veterinary care – that add up slowly but surely. It is often jarring when a bill comes after our companion animal requires surgery or other significant medical intervention.

"Those of us who work in animal rescue and adoption face a double-edged sword," says Eyal Lichtmann, CEO and executive director of the Regional Animal Protection Society, based in Richmond, British Columbia. "We want people to adopt animals because it is good for the animals, obviously, but we also encourage adoption because it's good for individuals and families. Animals make our lives, families, neighbourhoods and communities safer, healthier and happier. Animal companionship is good for animals and their people."

The challenge is balancing the desire to encourage animal adoptions with the reality of not just the time resources required to adequately care for the animal, but the financial resources as well.

One study indicates that the average cost for caring for a puppy in the first year is about $2,600, although this depends on a variety of things including the breed and size.

Routine care costs in successive years may be a little lower, especially during the healthy early and middle years, although training courses and boarding, dog walking or daycare, if chosen, can spike that number.

Another estimate suggests that a cat will cost about $500 a year – double that amount in the first year.

All of these numbers, though, presume routine expenditures. Emergencies – like automobile injuries, knee repairs or surgeries – can very easily rise to thousands of dollars very quickly.

"Whether a person has made arrangements for a friend or neighbour to adopt a pet as part of their estate planning or they make arrangements with a rescue organization, we recommend, if possible, allocating $10,000 per cat and $15,000 per dog," says Lichtmann. "This may sound like a lot. But, if you took the time to go through your receipts and credit card bills, you would see how quickly the incidental weekly bills add up and how one or two veterinary emergencies can blow a budget to smithereens."

The Regional Animal Protection Society (RAPS) is a no-kill animal serving organization.

"That means we accept animals from throughout British Columbia and across Canada who live in jurisdictions where they could face euthanasia, even if they are healthy and young," Lichtmann says. "This is a commitment we make to animals and people. We depend on the support of animal-loving people in the community to allow us to do this work."

RAPS began 25 years ago, in 1995, as a tiny group of extremely dedicated volunteers who humanely trapped and spayed or neutered the feral and stray cats in the Vancouver suburb of Richmond. Since then, it has grown into one of Canada's largest and most innovative no-kill animal organizations, operating the City of Richmond Animal Shelter, Canada's largest cat sanctuary, two thrift stores that generate a significant portion of revenue and, in 2018, opened the community-owned, not-for-profit RAPS Animal Hospital.

"We live in one of the most expensive places in Canada," says Lichtmann. "There isn't much that an animal organization can do about that macroeconomic reality. But with studies indicating that most Canadian families are just $200 away from insolvency, we recognized that there was one significant component of a family's budget upon which we could have an impact. By eliminating the profit motive, we have been able to deliver veterinary care at extremely competitive prices. Moreover, we are the only veterinary facility in our market that offers no-interest wellness payment plans."

Since opening two years ago, RAPS has also provided more than $1.2 million in partially and fully subsidized veterinary care and a similar amount in interest-free wellness payment plans to animals in households with low incomes or facing other challenges.

RAPS also has experience rehoming animals from households where their person has passed away.

"Among our facilities is a network of experienced foster families who can step in and immediately alleviate the upheaval in an animal's life at such a time of dramatic change," Lichtmann says.

SYMBOL OF TRUST

The Imagine Canada Trustmark: Have Confidence in Your Giving

The Standards Program

The Imagine Canada Standards Program is the only national, bilingual, accreditation that is designed for all Canadian registered charities and nonprofit organizations. To earn accreditation and use of the Trustmark, charities and nonprofits undergo a rigorous peer review process to demonstrate excellence in five fundamental areas: board governance; financial accountability and transparency; fundraising; staff management; and volunteer involvement. The Trustmark is a sought-after hallmark of excellence conveying good governance and confidence in leadership to donors, volunteers, sponsors and employees alike.

Fortitude in Turbulent Times

The COVID-19 crisis has, and will continue to, expose the vulnerabilities and strengths of Canadian charitable and nonprofit organizations in a manner unparalleled in history. Many are reporting a rapid increase in demand for services while experiencing a devastating decline in traditional sources of revenue. The pandemic's effects are pressure-testing good governance and leadership unlike anything that has come before it. Accredited organizations have had the foresight to ensure governance systems are in place which provides a stabilizing force. It's this strong footing that bolsters their ability to adapt quickly, generate creative solutions, and rethink their programs and fundraising models in the face of the current reality and a very different future.

Why give to an accredited organization?

Donating to an accredited organization means you are investing in sound leadership and a solid footing in our shared future. Here are three reasons why donors have peace of mind when giving to accredited organizations.

1. Confidence
   According to Ignite Lab Public Opinion survey, nearly 3 in 4 Canadians would have more confidence in a charity accredited by an independent body. Organizations must provide evidence to demonstrate compliance for each standard, pass a peer review and complete regular compliance report to show ongoing adherence to the standards, which means their policies and practices have been vetted by multiple independent professionals and by Imagine Canada.
2. Transparency
   The Trustmark demonstrates the highest possible commitment to transparency. One of the Standards Program's goals is to help charities become more open, notably by encouraging them to implement best practices which promote accessible and regular communications, including releasing financial statements and reporting on the impact of donations.
3. Review & Leadership
   Accredited organizations have demonstrated the board and leaders of the organization are committed to sound oversight. The Trustmark signifies these organizations have met a rigorous set of standards across all levels of the organization and are investing in continuously improving organizational excellence.

Accredited Charities and Nonprofits

Close to 250 Canadian charities from coast to coast to coast, big and small, and devoted to a diverse range of worthy causes in communities at home and around the globe have invested in sound leadership and earned accreditation by demonstrating organizational excellence. Visit www.imaginecanada.ca to view the list of accredited organizations.

The Standards Program gratefully acknowledges the generous financial contributions from founding and presenting sponsor Canada Life; and generous funding from the Lawson Foundation.

SYMBOLE DE CONFIANCE

Le sceau de confiance d'Imagine Canada : donnez en toute confiance

Le Programme de normes

Le Programme de normes d'Imagine Canada est le seul programme d'agrément national bilingue destiné à tous les organismes de bienfaisance enregistrés et à tous les organismes sans but lucratif canadiens. Les organismes obtiennent l'agrément au terme d'un processus exhaustif incluant une évaluation approfondie mené par des pairs-examinateurs. Pour obtenir le sceau de confiance, les organismes doivent démontrer leur excellence dans cinq domaines fondamentaux : gouvernance du conseil d'administration; responsabilité financière et transparence; collecte de fonds; gestion du personnel et participation des bénévoles. Le sceau est une marque d'excellence recherchée qui, tant pour les donateurs que pour les bénévoles, les commanditaires et les employés, atteste d'une bonne gouvernance et inspire confiance.

Force en période turbulente

La crise de la COVID-19 a exposé, et continuera d'exposer, les vulnérabilités comme les forces des organismes de bienfaisance et sans but lucratif d'une manière sans précédent. Un grand nombre d'organismes signalent une hausse rapide de la demande pour les services, alors qu'ils subissent une chute catastrophique des revenus provenant des sources traditionnelles. Les effets de la pandémie mettent à l'épreuve la bonne gouvernance et le leadership, sans référence avec les événements du passé. Les organismes agréés ont mis en place avec prévoyance des systèmes de gouvernance qui leur confèrent une force stabilisatrice. C'est cette assise qui renforce leur capacité de s'adapter rapidement, de mettre en œuvre des solutions innovantes et de repenser leurs programmes et leurs modèles de collecte de fonds, compte tenu de la réalité actuelle et de l'avenir qui s'annonce très différent.

Pourquoi donner à un organisme agréé?

Verser un don à un organisme agréé est investir dans un leadership sain et une fondation solide pour l'avenir. Voici trois raisons qui expliquent pourquoi faire un don à un organisme agréé est donner avec la tranquillité d'esprit.

1. Confiance
   Selon un sondage d'opinion publique réalisé par Ignite Lab Public, près de trois Canadiens sur quatre feraient plus confiance à un organisme caritatif agréé par une entité indépendante. Les organismes agréés doivent démontrer leur conformité à chacune des normes, réussir un examen par les pairs et présenter un rapport de conformité sur une base régulière pour démontrer qu'ils continuent de conformer aux normes. Leurs politiques et leurs pratiques sont donc approuvées par de multiples professionnels indépendants et par Imagine Canada.
2. Transparence
   Le sceau de confiance démontre le plus haut engagement en matière de transparence. Le Programme de normes a pour but, entre autres, d'aider les organismes caritatifs à devenir plus transparents, en les encourageant notamment à mettre en œuvre des pratiques exemplaires pour assurer des communications accessibles et régulières, dont la publication de leurs états financiers et de rapports sur les retombées des dons.
3. Examen et leadership
   Les organismes agréés ont démontré que leur conseil d'administration et leurs dirigeants attachent une grande importance à une saine surveillance. Le sceau de confiance atteste que ces organismes respectent un ensemble de normes rigoureuses à tous les niveaux de leur organisation et qu'ils investissent dans l'amélioration continue de l'excellence opérationnelle.

Organismes de bienfaisance et sans but lucratif agréés

Près de 250 organismes caritatifs canadiens d'un océan à l'autre, grands et petits, dévoués à un éventail de causes au sein des collectivités du Canada et du reste du monde, ont investi dans un leadership responsable et mérité leur agrément en apportant la preuve de leur excellence organisationnelle. Consultez la liste des organismes agréés à www.imaginecanada.ca.

Imagine Canada est reconnaissant envers Canada Vie, le commanditaire fondateur et principal du Programme de normes, et envers la Lawson Foundation pour leur généreux soutien financier.

yes the Guide has gone online -, that there is still a resource for professional advisors to share with their clients that they can look through and fantasize about the legacy they want to leave in the world. And on behalf of our thousands of members, I'm deeply grateful for the key role the Guide plays in connecting donors, advisors and the right charity representative to have the conversation about these important, life-changing gifts.

Whoever you are holding this guide; If you're a generous donor, you'll find that inspiration to connect with a charity that feels right to you. If you're an advisor, you'll find the most important contact information you need to move the gift forward . And if you're a charity you'll find a way to connect with both donors and advisors who need your charity to fulfill their vision for a better Canada and a better world.

"Our expertise at understanding the unique character of cats, dogs, small mammals and other animals allows us to assess them and ensure that they are able to spend the rest of their lives in a place where they will be content, happy and cared for."

In hundreds of cases, this means the RAPS Cat Sanctuary. People from all over Canada are leaving their cats to RAPS Cat Sanctuary in their wills, knowing they will be well cared for.

This rustic, country-like 'Kitty Club Med,' located on acres of farmland in Richmond, has designated areas for cats of different ages, temperaments and health statuses. There is a colony just for cats with feline leukemia; another for those with feline immunodeficiency virus (feline AIDS); and, there are a large number of cats in the general population who live healthy and happy lives with non-communicable conditions like diabetes. The Sanctuary even has designated 'Kitty Comforters,' who provide individualized attention to the hundreds of cats in the facility.

On top of being an ideal place for cats, it is also a destination for people — those who love cats but perhaps are not able to have them in their own homes for whatever reason, as well as seniors and people with physical, emotional or intellectual differences, for whom interaction with the animals is therapeutic and socially engaging. Visiting hours also attract hundreds of others who just like being around cats. (Anyone who has known cats in their lives knows that there are those who prefer a life of solitude and to be largely left alone. The Sanctuary has accommodations for those special cats as well.)

RAPS is also intending to build a dog sanctuary in the coming months.

"A lot of us sort of assume that we will outlive our pets," Lichtmann says. "But it's not unusual for cats to live to 20 years of age and dogs to reach almost that ripe age. For most of us, a little arithmetic can suggest that we would be remiss if we did not make some provision in our estate planning for animals we may leave behind."

Further resources about estate planning involving pets and ensuring a forever home for animals that may be left behind are available at RAPSBC.com.

Even for years under audit, the CRA at times requests just sample documents, so the charity may be in the position of translating documents that will never be read.

Generally, the CRA allows a period of time for the production of documents, and understands that organizations operating in non-English or French-speaking parts of the world will have documents in other languages. Indeed, if someone sends an email to an organization in a language that is not English the organization can hardly be faulted for the fact that its books and records are only in English or French.

APTOWITZER FOOTNOTES

[1] This piece is taken, with some changes, from "Running a Charity: A Legal Guide" published by Civil Sector Press. This summary is of a general nature only, is not intended to deal with all Canadian income tax considerations. It is not intended to be, and should not be construed to be, legal or tax advice to any particular reader. Therefore, readers should consult their own tax and legal advisers with respect to their particular circumstances.

[2] For the sake of simplicity, we assume the highest federal tax bracket, but even if the individual was in the second-highest bracket the credit rate would drop down to offset the tax owing in that bracket.

[3] The tax credit for donations over $200 more than offsets the taxes that would otherwise have been due.

[4] When the provincial surtaxes are taken into account, the offset at the highest marginal rates is somewhat higher.

[5] As PEI charges surtaxes when provincial tax exceeds $12,500, the effect of the offset is higher with income over approximately $99,000 (assuming a single individual with only the basic personal exemption).

[6] Note that this does not include shares held in an RRSP, RRIF, or pension plan.

IN CLOSING:

When I am giving a planned giving workshop, there's always a slide on what motivates a donor to make the gift. The reality is that most annual donors do not make a planned gift. Why they don't is always my next slide. I call these the five Cs.

Clarity: Most of us are not sure of what we want to accomplish when we engage in an estate plan. It's often the reason so many of us have not prepared or updated our will. Being unsure is often an excuse for inaction.

Conflict: Most donors give to more than one charity. If asked to choose one charity to name in their will, they are reluctant. Their spouse, business partner, children or family may have different expectations concerning the disposition of the estate. Conflict – or fear of it – Is a powerful disincentive.

Control: Effective estate planning often involves the irrevocable transfer of property. So, too, a planned gift. A donor spends a lifetime trying to control the events in their life, or if in business, consolidating control of their business. To ask a donor to relinquish control is difficult for many to accept.

Confidence: Those who have achieved financial success rely on their professional advisors. Let's face it, each of us approaches the client with our own bias about the best way to achieve a result. The donor may be asking: 'Is the advisor who helped me structure my real estate purchases, my business acquisition specialist, my income tax whiz, my numbers person who's kept my business running smoothly? Are they the professionals who can help me figure out how to dispose of my estate? Does this charity have a long-term vision for my gift? Will they be good stewards of my gift? Will they still be around when the time comes? What confidence do I have?'

Complexity: Effective estate planning often surrounds itself with a degree of complexity. The donor may be an expert in their field of endeavour. But try explaining the difference between a capital dividend, a foreign dividend, common vs preferred dividend, and a life insurance dividend, to use but one example. Assuming the donor 'gets it', can they explain the strategy to their spouse, business partner or family? What if the rules change between now and the donor's death? A complex plan may be the perfect solution to the problem of a planned gift, business or family asset transfer. However, it may come down to a matter of trust or, failing that, let the next generation figure it out. It's too complex!

Each of us involved in gift planning – be it an advisor or gift officer – knows our stuff. We are committed to building a better future. The cause is noble but, in the end, it boils down to the donor. We have to understand what makes our donor tick. We need to uncover their values, help give purpose to their philanthropy, help them overcome the barriers to action and provide them with the tools they need to more fully be the citizens we know they are.

- Only a small portion (less than 25%) of those making new wills and those updating existing wills are including charitable bequests in their estate plans.
- When it comes to updating wills, Coronavirus has had a minor impact on the age of folks engaged in estate planning. Whereas before the pandemic, will-updates were predominantly undertaken by individuals 61+ years of age, during the last month, it's been slightly more folks in the 30-45 (3%) and 46-60 (7%) age groups.
- Of those folks making a new will, 65% of the activity is being undertaken by individuals under 60 years of age. While Civics and Baby Boomers have always been the prime market for charitable bequest marketing, we now have primed audiences in the Gen X – and even older Millennial – cohorts. These folks are now most active.

Perhaps more importantly than the survey results themselves, we were struck by how many lawyers declined to participate because they were too swamped with the increase in estate planning traffic!

Also of note, the Irish My Legacy Campaign initiative reports that three-quarters of lawyers are experiencing increased estate planning traffic – and the average increase is almost 30%. Added to that, Irish lawyers report that 86% of those who make inquiries are following through and completing their wills.

What Does a Smart Fundraiser Do in This New Pandemic World?

Many fundraisers we've talked to have the strong intuitive feeling that now is not the time to talk about death with our donors. We believe the opposite.

We talked about this in our April 2020 fireside chat "What Now? Planned Giving During the Pandemic of our Lifetimes" with Ryan Fraser a financial advisor with Quiet Legacy Planning Group and Brenda McEachern a lawyer from RBC Wealth Management Financial Services. You can also find a fantastic summary of this webinar penned by my colleague Fraser Green on the Good Works blog.

Your donors have made it necessary for you to keep up – or even ramp up – your legacy communications and marketing efforts. A large number of your supporters are making their wills now.

Donors on average, make three wills in the course of their lifetime. You cannot afford to cut your planned giving activities now. You snooze, you lose.

Having said that, it's critical that your gift planning messages not sound desperate, rushed, organizationally-focussed or panic-driven. Your voice and stories must be thoughtful, appropriate and sensitive to the feelings that we're all having during this pandemic.

But: Fondée en 1918, L'Association des Amputés de guerre offre des programmes en constante évolution. D'abord vouée aux anciens combattants amputés, elle aide aujourd'hui l'ensemble des personnes amputées, y compris les enfants. En faisant un don testamentaire, vous perpétuez l'oeuvre des amputés de guerre et contribuez au mieux-être des personnes amputées, lesquelles bénéficient notamment du Programme LES VAINQUEURS. Celui-ci procure aux enfants amputés une aide diversifiée, entre autres pour leurs membres artificiels, afin qu'ils puissent mener une vie active et autonome. Grâce à votre appui, les programmes de l'association poursuivront leur essor. L'organisme ne reçoit aucune subvention gouvernementale.

Give to a better future

Your bequest today can change someone else's tomorrow

When someone loses their sight, their life can change in many ways. They may have to give up their job or turn over their driver's license. They'll have to learn to adapt to doing everyday tasks without the help of sight. And they'll need to come to terms with the emotional challenges of sight loss as sunshine, colours, and the faces of their loved ones begin to fade from view. You can help.

By making a gift in your will to the CNIB Foundation, you'll ensure people in your community have the support they need to move forward with confidence after losing their sight, and continue to live the lives they choose.

Call Cindi Meyer, Director of Planned Giving, at 1-800-563-2642 (ext. 7470) or email cindi. meyer@cnib.ca to learn more about creating a gift in your will.

You can help give a lifetime of sanctuary.

Donkeys are the 'forgotten equine' – gentle animals who serve quietly and are too often mistreated or abandoned. Your legacy can give them the forever home and care they deserve. To make a bequest, please call 519.836.1697 or email info@thedonkeysanctuary.ca.

RE: CREATING A LEGACY

A track record of turning information into inspiration

Read the Paul Nazareth editorial Page 15

OVER 5.59 MILLION CANADIANS ARE AT RISK OF GOING BLIND AND THERE ARE NO CURES... YET.

Blindness can affect anyone — infants, children, adults — and it is life limiting. Imagine the struggles of those coping with school or trying to get a job. People living with vision loss just want to see the world like everyone else.

BUT THERE IS HOPE.

Fighting Blindness Canada (FBC) is the only Canadian charity solely dedicated to research for inherited eye diseases, and others like glaucoma and age-related macular degeneration (AMD). To date, we have invested over $40 million dollars to understand, preserve and restore sight.

Thanks to donors like you, Fighting Blindness Canada is able to fund internationally renowned vision researchers who are developing new treatments and cures for blinding eye diseases. Every dollar you give brings us closer to ending blindness.

You can help restore sight through a gift in your will. Please contact Ann Morrison, 1.800.461.3331, ext. 232 or amorrison@fightingblindness.ca.

Purpose: Since it's founding in 1918, The War Amps programs have grown from assisting war amputees - whom we still serve - to all amputees, including children. A charitable estate donation in your will honours the legacy of war amputees and makes a difference in the lives of amputees through programs like CHAMP for child amputees. CHAMP provides comprehensive support including financial assistance for artificial limbs to allow children to lead independent and active lives. With your help, our vital programs will carry on long into the future. The War Amps does not receive government grants.

CAGP

The legacy of your lifetime is one of lives saved.

The Canadian Red Cross has been helping people in need for over 120 years. We're there when wildfires sweep across communities and wherever famine takes hold. We provide relief after floods destroy homes and life-saving support during conflicts that tear families apart. A gift in your will, of any amount, means we can be there today, tomorrow, and long into the future.

You can provide for loved ones and still leave a meaningful legacy. Discover the enduring impact a gift in your will can make.
