PUBLISHER'S NOTE

Challenge, Change and Responsibility

Welcome to the 36th edition of the Canadian Donor's Guide – your authoritative annual directory of fundraising organizations in Canada. I appreciate the opportunity to provide you with this comprehensive reference resource and related editorial content to assist your respective responsibilities in the planned giving environment.

Our society, including the charitable sector, has seen many challenges since I wrote my 2020 Publisher's Note – and not just due to the ongoing pandemic. It has been an education like no other.

I thank our friends at the Canadian Association of Gift Planners (CAGP) for not only presenting their annual conference (virtually) – this year titled The Challenge of Change: Reimagining the Future of Philanthropy – but for the courage to bring us many tough topics. The speakers and presenters were meant to get us to think, learn, talk and to call us to action. Some of those speakers appear in this year's editorial section.

The Honourable Senator Ratna Omidvar impacted me and others greatly, with her plenary speech. The Senator said 'we must accept and understand the past before we can move forward with action.' You will find some of Senator Omidvar's words are worth a careful read on the two pages that follow. I hope you find them as inspiring as I did.

Another speaker who spurred me to action was Sharon Redsky. Sharon writes in this edition, 'There is so much richness and wisdom in traditional customs and practices that can influence transformative approaches. With this in mind, and the opportunities for the philanthropic sector to take action, I am optimistic for the future.'

The themes of challenge and change seem to permeate this year's editorial section. You will see that in the article by Megan Leslie of WWF-Canada. She believes we have the power to change and to meet threats head on. Megan gives us a great example of two different outcomes. By reading Natasha van Bentum's article Voices of Indigenous-Led Philanthropy, you learn about the Ulnooweg Indigenous Communities Foundation and the work they do to strengthen the relationship between Canada's philanthropic sector and Atlantic Canada's Indigenous Communities.

In an interview of Dahabo Ahmed Omer, by Kim Hart Macneill, Dahabo says 'It's an uncomfortable place to be, to know that these challenges are in your face and there's no way to ignore them.' It seems time for us to become the "Warriors for Justice" that Senator Omidvar asks us to be – we need to face the challenges, say the words and follow through with action. We must recognize racism, acknowledge it and then work to eradicate it.

Inukshuk Enterprises has taken a modest first step by inviting charities that support racialized and marginalized peoples, along with those that support Indigenous peoples – and women and children in domestic situations – to submit information about their charities to be included in our Canadian Donor's Guide. This allows donors to find them here and connect with them to learn, donate or support their efforts. We are also committed to learning and finding more ways to help.

Senator Omidvar told the conference audience, that this will not be easy. Please review her five ideas. I encourage you to visit The Circle on Philanthropy and Aboriginal Peoples in Canada at www.the-circle.ca (found on the inside of our back cover of this edition) and the National Centre for Truth and Reconciliation at <https://nctr.ca/> for more information. I also recommend you review the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's 94 Calls to Action.

Alison Stoneman
Publisher, Canadian Donor's Guide

We thank Paul Nazareth for his thoughts about connecting donors to charities and how they can use our Guide, in print or online, to help. Another contributor who deserves our gratitude is Adam Aptowitz who keeps us current with tax considerations for charitable giving. A new contributor this year, Daniel Lanteigne, provides advice on how to become "the perfect donor" – including being bold and trusting our gut. Pretty good advice for almost every situation!

You will also find profiles of the Regional Animal Protection Agency, VICD Service Dogs and some information on how the COVID-19 pandemic has affected charities across the country. We also have information about Imagine Canada's standards program.

Delivering more than 17,000 copies of our publication to key decision makers and professional advisors in Canada's donor community every year is not possible without the relationships the Canadian Donor's Guide shares with the Canadian Association of Gift Planners (CAGP), the Canadian Bar Association, STEP Canada and Imagine Canada. We are so very thankful for their support and commitment. In addition, we could not provide this Guide without the many charitable organizations across Canada that entrust us to bring their messages to their key audiences – those charities that purchase advertising.

Thank you again for your dedicated support of the Canadian Donor's Guide as a valued resource. If you have questions, suggestions or enhancements, feel free to contact me directly. May the Guide always be helpful in your endeavours to easily and effectively match donors with charities.

Last year I ended with "Every Canadian has a legacy." This year, "Every Canadian has a responsibility."

SEEKING SYSTEMIC CHANGE

Five Good Ideas for Transforming into Warriors for Justice

Systemic racism tends to hide in unlikely places. At times it has clear victims, but at times it expresses itself in seemingly benign ways. Although they are not immediately obvious, deeply embedded expressions of colonialism can even be found in the Income Tax Act.

Let's start with the legally recognized definition of philanthropy. According to Canadian law, charities can engage in relief of poverty, education, religion, and other general purposes. You would think that most organizations engaged in public good would fit in. You would be wrong.

As one example, let's take relief of poverty. Our understanding of relief of poverty is grounded in the old-world construct of the rich giving to the poor to alleviate their suffering. And although organizations that relieve poverty, such as food banks, are deemed charitable, those that seek to prevent poverty, such as credit counselling services, are not. Many equity-seeking groups, whether they focus on racial or Indigenous justice, likely do not fit into these four types of activities. And even when they apply for status, and their application is rejected, they find no recourse in the courts. Not a single decision of the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) has been overturned by the courts in the last 50 years.

I know that many of you will be thinking: what makes this an expression of systemic racism? For a very simple reason: it shuts the door on a new modernized definition of charity which takes racial injustice and inequity into account. It prevents organizations that focus on these issues from accessing charitably exempt donations. There is of course a solution – we can either legislate a modernized version of the definition or we can allow appeals of refused or deregistered organizations to proceed, not to the federal court, but to the Tax Court, which is less expensive and, most importantly, is able to call witnesses and subject matter experts.

The Income Tax Act also limits charities to spending their charitable dollars in two ways. First, charities can grant charitable dollars to another charity. Second, they can spend their charitable dollars to pursue their own charitable activities. So far so good, because these limits are in place to ensure that charitable dollars are spent on charitable activities. No one can argue with accountability.

But what happens when a charity is best served by working with a non charity, such as a not-for-profit, a co-op, a social enterprise, or a local organization? In this case, the CRA will demand that the charity be fully accountable for the partner organizations' spending, as if these activities were their own. This is called, in CRA language, "direction and control". The impact is severe. Since many indigenous and racial justice organizations are not charities, they are not able to

The Honourable Ratna Omidvar, C.M., O. Ont
Senator for Ontario

receive donations. It is no wonder that less than 6% of charitable dollars flow to Indigenous organizations and even less to BIPOC (Black, Indigenous, People of Colour) organizations. The impact is even more severe for Canada's international development charities who work with organizations thousands of miles away. Academics and lawyers have concluded that this law is racist and colonial and must be replaced. I have tabled a bill in the Senate to accomplish this. My bill, known as the Effective and Accountable Charities Act, will replace the current Income Tax Act language of "own activities" with new language of "resource accountability", which will both empower charities while holding them accountable.

But legislation is only one part of the equation – we also need to think about the construct of philanthropy as we know it. What is the real purpose of philanthropy? Is it a vehicle to meet the interests of the donor or is it a vehicle to meet the needs of society? I believe that Darren Walker, CEO and President of the Ford Foundation, said it best in his recent interview with (CBS television program) 60 Minutes when he made the point that philanthropy is not about generosity. His argument is that generosity is insufficient. The real goal of giving should be justice. How many philanthropists are truly engaging with systemic causes of injustice?

Philanthropy reflects power and privilege in Canada, and this is clear from a cursory look at who sits on boards. Last summer, as the pandemic was upending our lives, I threw a challenge to the charitable sector. I asked them to do a simple thing; look at yourself in the mirror and tell us who you see. A subsequent survey by Statistics Canada determined that, whilst women are well represented on boards, other minority groups such as immigrants, LGBTQ2+ individuals, and Indigenous peoples, are not. The survey also found that 47% of respondents said that their organization did not have a written diversity policy and 23% did not know.

I propose that the time has come for governance equity. The government must mandate the collection of diversity in governance on an annual basis. It is time for a sharing of power, to have decisions made by people who have lived exclusion or a connection to it.

The question is: how can we turn philanthropy into a force not just for good, but for justice? There are recent and illuminating examples. The Inspirit Foundation and the Laidlaw Foundation recently announced a $3.85 million grant to the Foundation for Black Communities to ensure a sustainable base of support for Black-led organizations. Canada Helps has recently launched a matching program for donations made for preventing the rise of anti-Asian racism. Maytree, which was my home for many years, has invested in creating a rights-based housing policy – clearly, all these examples are of philanthropy being engaged with justice.

You as gift planners, wealth managers, accountants, and institutional investors have a direct line to donors. You have a responsibility to raise the question of justice with them. You can be part of the movement to shift power and influence.

I will leave you with five good ideas:

- 1 Use the word racism. Do not shy away from it. Do not use soft proxies – such as diversity. Clarify that diversity is a demographic gathering of population statistics, but inclusion and equity are what you do with diversity.
- 2 Present solutions that are systemic - not simply relieving poverty, but preventing it.
- 3 Tell them that this will take time. Effective philanthropy is hard. It calls for the patience of Job.
- 4 Address the issue of leadership with them. If the leadership does not change, if it is not prepared to share power, then the search for equity becomes much harder. It is easy to have pictures of diversity on their website, but folks are getting sophisticated. They are looking at pictures of governance. Exhort them to develop a Diversity and Inclusion policy which looks at the nuts and bolts of governance.

- 5 And finally, do not hesitate to speak truth to power. As Paul Taylor, executive director of FoodShare Toronto, has said, it is not enough to create a safe place for equity, it is time to create a brave space for equity. A first stop for your bravery would be to ask if your organization, the organization you are engaged with, if it has a diversity and equity policy. Almost one in four respondents of the Stats Canada survey did not know if their organization had one.

So, I put out a call for bravery. And I hope this bravery will start with you – it is time to transform from gift planners into warriors for justice.

PERSPECTIVE

The Vitality of an Analog Guide in a Digital Age – Unlocking Generosity in Estate Planning

In my role with the Canadian Association of Gift Planners (CAGP) I have travelled the back roads of Canada from Newfoundland to Vancouver Island and visited dozens of Estate Planning Councils and the offices of thousands of estate planning lawyers. Few things comfort me more as a 21-year charitable gift planner than seeing the Canadian Donor's Guide on the table where lawyers keep their estate planning discussion material; not on the dusty shelf with the legal reference guides.

As our community launches the new “Will Power” program (WillPower.ca) to engage the public across Canada in a campaign to normalize the idea of charitable bequests, information still needs to live on the coffee tables of estate lawyers. And for deep thinking donors who like to do their homework and research charities, I am so grateful for donorsguide.ca where the digital edition, over and above the old Canada Revenue Agency charities search site, has the actual contact information of human beings at charities that donors can talk to. As a believer in the importance of the digital age, it pains me how hard it is to find human gift planners on the websites of charities still.

I'll admit, as someone who has used the Guide to help donors as a fundraiser and clients as an advisor, one of my favourite sounds to hear from donors when they look through the Guide is “Huh!”

That's the sound of someone realizing

one of two things:

#1: I didn't know my favourite charity did that! Truly the Donors Guide has been a great help to the gift planning community in clarifying not just the legal title of a charity but more of what they do and how they do it. Contributing to the more healthy culture of trust and ultimately more undesigned gifts so an organization can meet the needs of the day when the gift comes in, not just when it is written. Often years go by between these two dates and programs, problems and solutions change.

#2: I didn't know there were more organizations connected to a cause I care about or problem I am looking to address! CAGP is proud to stand alongside estate planners who have deeper discussions about philanthropy with their clients. From food security, social inequality, gender justice, community access – there are so many organizations donors know well, but even more they discover through the Donor's Guide that can help them make a bigger difference than they thought possible in their Will. As the advisors who serve these many generous clients and families will share, they are the masters of the how to make a bequest, when to make the plan and what assets to give...but the why of giving and the choice between the many charities that represent solutions, is something no one can truly anticipate. The Guide is a gift in this regard.

Most importantly, the charity and advisor community is grateful for the decades long collaboration of the Donor's Guide team and their commitment to reaching ALL of Canada. The Guide goes out to thousands of advisors in every corner of the country and creates a point of both equity and access to empower the philanthropic conversation and support the decisions of all donors at different ages and stages. Whether it be those who prefer the hard copy or the online edition, the Guide continues to represent the best of Canadian charity to all Canadians coast to coast to coast.

So, to you dear reader, whoever you are holding this Guide; If you're a generous supporter, you'll find a source of inspiration. If you're an advisor, you'll find critical information. And if you're a charity you'll find a way to connect with both donors and advisors who can find you and engage your organization and support your mission to fulfill their vision for a better Canada and a better world.

CHARITABLE DONATIONS

A Summary of Tax Considerations

INTRODUCTION

It is a peculiar result of history that regulation of charities in Canada is part of the Income Tax Act (ITA). One of the unintended consequences of this placement is that the regulation of charities fits primarily within an income tax context. So, donations are incentivized through the use of income tax mechanisms, and sanction against charities is framed as the revocation of the special status which provides them with their umbrella of privileges. This means that both charities and their supporters cannot fully understand their options for supporting a particular charitable aim without understanding the incentives of donating to charity and the limitations in charitable operations.

QUALIFIED DONEES

It bears mentioning that government has extended the benefits given to charities to certain other entities known as qualified donees. They include:

- Registered Canadian Amateur Athletic Associations;
- Certain organizations that provide low cost housing for the aged;
- Most municipalities;
- Certain municipal or public bodies performing a function of government in Canada;
- Registered National Arts Service Organizations
- Certain foreign charities that have received a gift from the federal government;
- The federal and provincial governments;
- The United Nations and its agencies; and
- Registered Journalism Organizations.

INCENTIVES

As the incentives for donating are primarily tax-based, one should have a basic understanding of the tax system to appreciate the value of the inducement. There are two fundamental aspects of Canada's tax system to keep in mind. The first is that Canadians are taxed progressively. That is, the first chunk of income (a bracket) is taxed at a low percentage, the next chunk at a higher rate, and so on. The second rule to understand is that after a Canadian adds up their entire income there are certain subtractions that are made which reduce the total amount of tax that is paid to the government. Those that are made prior to the application of the tax rate are called deductions; those that are made after are called credits.

Tax donations are treated as either donations or credits depending upon who makes the donation. If the donations are made by corporations, the donor entity can deduct the amount of the donation from its income prior to the application of the appropriate tax rate(s) to its income bracket(s). On the other hand when donations are made by individuals, the amount of the donation is multiplied by the appropriate federal percentage and deducted from federal tax, and the same procedure is conducted in each province at their rates. The product of these calculations is then deducted from the tax owing.

The tax credit itself is determined by multiplying the first $200 by the lowest combined federal/provincial rate in the appropriate province (except Alberta), and multiplying everything over $200 by the designated rate (in most Canadian jurisdictions the highest rate provincial rate). The table on the facing page (Table A - Page 12) illustrates the tax credits available for donations of $1,200 in the different provinces.

To simplify the discussion, we will make

Adam Aptowitz
Drache Aptowitz LLP

two assumptions. First, unless otherwise stated, the donor holds the items to be donated as capital property. Second, we will assume a credit rate of 46%.

DONATIONS OF CASH

Donations of cash are fairly straightforward. The charity simply receipts the face value of the amount donated. (This does not apply to currency held for collection purposes). Depending on the province and the donor's tax bracket, the tax credits generated from the donation would offset the tax owing on the income earned, so no tax would be payable on the money earned – and then donated. At lower income brackets, and in Alberta, the credits would actually more than offset the tax owing and the donor would be able to shelter other income from tax with the credits earned from this donation. If the donor is donating cash that is not income to them in the year donating, the credit could be used to offset taxes owing from other sources. But, in those provinces where the tax rate is higher than the credit rate on donations, the donor could still be paying tax on a dollar given to charity!

PUBLIC SECURITIES

Canada levies tax on 50 per cent of the appreciation in value of a capital good. The tax is levied when the item is disposed of (i.e. sold, given away or donated).

However, the ITA does contain an exemption for publicly-listed securities (on certain exchanges) donated to charity.

Moreover, the donor continues to receive a donation tax receipt equal to the fair market value of the shares donated. Thus, there is no tax on the donation, but the donor still receives a tax credit equal to the fair market value of the donation.

While shares of publicly-traded corporations are the most popular form of security to be donated to charity, there are a variety of other sophisticated financial securities that may also be donated. Examples include: exchange-traded funds, index funds, hedge funds, warrants, rights, and put and call options. As long as these products qualify as publicly-traded securities, they will qualify for the special tax treatment accorded donations of this type.

Example:

Assume that Kirk lives in Ontario and buys one share of a high-tech company for $1.00. Over time, the share rises in value and may even split once or more than once. After ten years, with all splits factored in, Kirk owns shares worth a total of $100. If Kirk were to sell the share he would have a capital gain of $99 (i.e. the fair market value of $100, less the cost of $1). Applying the capital gains inclusion rate of 50%, only $47.50 would be taxable. Further applying a tax rate of 46%, the amount of tax payable would be $21.85. Thus, if Kirk sells the shares, he is left with after-tax income of $78.15 (i.e. $100 - $21.85).

Conversely, let's say Kirk decides he wants to donate his shares instead of selling them. In this case, Kirk has no tax to pay and, of course, receives no income from the sale of the share. He does however receive a tax receipt for $100, which will offset $46 of taxes due from other sources. So, assuming Kirk is paying tax on income from other sources, the actual after-tax cost of this donation is $54.

FLOW-THROUGH SHARES

For income tax purposes, the cost of such a share is deemed to be zero. So, even if the buyer buys the share at $10.00 and sells it at $8.00, the share is still assumed to have gained $8.00 in value and is therefore taxed on an $8.00 capital gain even though it actually lost $2.00. (Don't worry about the shareholder though; ownership of the share gave her access to a deduction making it worthwhile). Flow-through shares are like any other asset and can be donated to charity. When these shares are publicly traded, there is no tax on the capital gain. However, for purposes of donation, the law considers the amount of the purchase price to be a capital gain and only the amount in excess of that (if there is any) to be eligible for the capital gains exemption.

STOCK OPTIONS

An employee who exercises a stock option (i.e. buys it at less than fair market value) receives a benefit equal to the difference between the purchase price (and any amounts they may have paid for the option) and the fair market value at the time of purchase. Tax is calculated based on the amount of this benefit. In certain circumstances, the employee can claim a deduction against the stock option benefit so only 50% of the benefit is taxable. If an employee stock option is exercised and marketable securities are donated within 30 days after the option is exercised and if certain other conditions are met, only 25% of the benefit is taxable.

Individuals who make qualifying donations of marketable securities acquired through such stock options are not required to report any of the benefit. And if the shares are traded on a public exchange then their donation is treated as the donation of other publicly listed shares as described previously.

PRIVATE SECURITIES

The donation of securities of private corporations is dealt with in one of two ways; either the gifts are "excepted," or they are not. An excepted gift is a share donated to a charitable organization or public foundation where the donor deals at arm's length with the charity's directors/trustees, officers, and other like officials. In these circumstances the gift is treated as any other gift of capital in which there is no special tax treatment for the donation (i.e. the donor pays tax on the on the disposition).

In cases where the gift has been donated to a private foundation or to a public charity to which the donor is related, the gift is not considered "made" until one of two things happen: either the item donated must cease to be a non-qualifying security (e.g. the corporation is no longer controlled by the donor or the corporation becomes publicly listed), or the charity has disposed of the security within five years of receiving the donation. The fair market value of the gift is then the lesser of:

- the value of the security when transferred to the charity,
- and the value of the security when the gift is deemed to have been made.

Note that the donor does not have to include any capital gain in their income before the shares are sold by the charity, so that the donor is not paying tax in advance of receiving the receipt. If the charity does not sell the shares within five years, the donor will not receive a receipt and the gain will never be taxable.

RRSPs/RRIFs

People may find that they have more than enough money in their RRSPs once they get to a certain age, and are willing to make donations in their lifetime in order to see the fruits of those donations while they are still alive. The RRSP rules do allow for withdrawals from the plan, but upon withdrawal the institution that holds the account (usually a bank) is required to withhold certain amounts. These amounts, on a per withdrawal basis (i.e. not cumulatively for the year), are:

Province	Combined Federal / Provincial Tax Credit Rate on first $200 donation	Tax Credit	Combined Federal / Provincial Tax Credit Rate on amounts over $200 ²	Tax Credit on amount over $200	Total combined Federal and Provincial Tax Credit
Alberta ³	25.00%	$ 50.00	54.00%	$540.00	$ 590.00
British Columbia	20.06%	$ 40.12	49.80%	$498.00	$ 538.12
Manitoba	25.8%	$ 51.60	50.4%	$504.00	$ 555.60
New Brunswick	24.68%	$ 49.36	50.95%	$509.50	$ 558.86
Newfoundland	23.70%	$ 47.40	51.3%	$513.00	$ 560.40
Northwest Territories	20.90%	$ 41.80	47.05%	$470.50	$ 512.30
Nova Scotia	23.79%	$ 47.58	54.00%	$540.00	$ 587.58
Nunavut	19.00%	$ 38.00	44.50%	$445.00	$ 483.00
Ontario ⁴	20.05%	$ 40.10	44.16%	$441.60	$ 481.70
Prince Edward Island ⁵	24.80%	$ 49.60	49.70%	$497.00	$ 546.60
Saskatchewan	25.50%	$ 51.00	47.50%	$475.00	$ 526.00
Yukon	21.40%	$ 42.80	45.80%	$458.00	$ 500.80

Table A - Tax Credit on $1,200 in donations for 2020

- 10% (5% in Québec) on withdrawals up to $5,000
- 20% (10% in Québec) on withdrawals between $5,001 - $15,000
- 30% (15% in Québec) on withdrawals of more than $15,000.

The amounts withdrawn are claimed as income to the owner of the RRSP in the year withdrawn, and tax is paid at the owner's marginal rate. Thus, if a potential donor wants to donate $50,000 and has that money in his or her RRSP, a withdrawal of $50,000 would give the potential donor outside of Québec $35,000 cash to donate. The remaining 30 per cent ($15,000 in this case) would be remitted to the government by the bank and credited as income tax already paid when the donor files his or her tax return for that year.

A donor may also wish to donate his or her RRSP or RRIF upon death. There are two ways to do this. One way is to list the charity as a beneficiary of the RRSP in the donor's Will. The other way is to make use of the direct beneficiary election, which is signed when the RRSP is first opened (and can usually be changed at will). If the first method is used, the RRSP will fall into the donor's general estate before passing on to the charity. Under the second method, the RRSP will automatically become the property of the charity without going through the estate.

The advantage of using the RRSP direct beneficiary election is that the RRSP will not pass through probate. When a Will is probated, the various provinces charge different amounts of tax on the total value of assets passed on in the Will. Thus, the amount of money in an RRSP is added to the other assets and a portion is taken by the government before any of the assets are passed on.

INSURANCE

Sometimes an insurance policy becomes superfluous. If the policy is unnecessary the donor may decide to donate it to charity.

From a tax perspective, the donor of a life insurance policy will have an income inclusion of the proceeds of disposition less the adjusted cost base (ACB). An income inclusion is distinct from a capital gain, and effectively means that a donation of an insurance policy has no net tax benefit for the donor. The ACB calculation is rather complicated and takes into account the premiums paid, dividends received, and – for policies purchased after 1982 – the Net Cost of Pure Insurance (NCPI). Despite the ominous name, the NCPI is not overly difficult to calculate, although it will likely require professional advice from either an experienced advisor or the insurance company involved.

In a February 2008 bulletin, and later in another setting, the Canada Revenue Agency (CRA) laid down certain guidelines for determining the Fair Market Value of a disposed-of policy. In these pronouncements, the calculation of the proceeds of disposition (POD) of an insurance policy takes into account:

- the policy's loan value;
- the face value of the policy;
- the state of health of the insured and their life expectancy;
- conversion privileges;
- other policy terms, such as term riders, double indemnity provisions; and,
- replacement value.

The idea here is that the value of a policy may or may not be accurately reflected by any cash surrender value held by the policy. When valuing the policy for both tax and receipting purposes, the donor and the charity must take into account the fact that the donor may be very ill and the policy may mature shortly after donation. A policy that would otherwise be impossible to receipt would become valuable to the donor. To do this, the advice of an actuary and an appraiser is critical to correctly valuing the policy.

The charity may either cash the policy and use the funds immediately, or pay the premiums on the policy and collect the larger death benefit when the insured dies. Of course, a very generous donor may not only donate the policy to the charity but also donate the yearly premiums to the charity. In this case, both the donation of the policy and the donated premiums would be receiptable.

ANNUITIES

An annuity is a contract under which one person deposits a sum of money with another in exchange for a subsequent income. It is basically the reverse concept of insurance.

The income may be paid for either a specified period, for life, or for life with a minimum guaranteed period. Under the latter method, if the purchaser of the annuity dies during the guaranteed period, the annuity will be paid to some other person whom the purchaser had designated to receive it.

Although annuities are normally purchased from insurance companies or trust companies, life annuities are sometimes purchased from charities. Essentially, a person gives the charity a sum of money irrevocably in exchange for a promise by the charity to pay the donor a monthly income for life. The funds received would then be invested by the charity at a higher rate than it would pay to the donor.

For annuities issued after December 21, 2002, the donor would be eligible to receive a receipt for an amount equal to the excess of the amount contributed by the donor over the amount that would be paid at that time to an arm's-length third party to acquire an annuity to fund the guaranteed payments.

CANADIAN CULTURAL PROPERTY

The Government of Canada has set up the Canadian Cultural Property Export Review Board to certify which artwork or other item has cultural significance to Canadians. This not only applies to works with a Canadian aspect, it applies to any cultural work that Canada may want to keep within its borders. If the donation is certified and made to a designated institution, there is no tax due on the disposition. Thus, if the charity is hoping to attract donations of property with a particular cultural significance, it is important to secure the designation.

There are two categories of designation:

- Category A is granted for an indefinite period of time to institutions that are well-established and meet all of the criteria related to certain legal, curatorial and environmental requirements.
- Category B is granted in relation to an institution involved in the proposed acquisition of an object (or collection) that does not meet all of the criteria for designation, but which has demonstrated its capability to effectively preserve the type of property in question. More information on the designation is available from the Department of Canadian Heritage on their website at <https://www.canada.ca/en/canadian-heritage/services/funding/movable-cultural-property/designated-organizations.html>

The criteria by which the review board makes its decisions is beyond the scope of this article, but the board has published a guide on the subject available here: <https://www.canada.ca/content/dam/pch/documents/services/movable-cultural-property/certif-guide-eng.pdf>.

As a proper certification may involve many months of research, a request for certification should be made well before the donation is contemplated.

If a taxpayer donates certified property to a designated institution, there will not be any tax owing on the gift. In addition, the taxpayer is entitled to a tax receipt for 100% of the value of the gift (as determined by the review board).

INVENTORY

The determination of whether an item is inventory or capital is one of the most fundamental areas of our income tax system, but nevertheless is shrouded in vagueness and controversy. For example, to most people a house is a capital property. But, if the owner of the home is engaged in the business of buying and selling homes, the property becomes inventory of a business. There is a different tax treatment on the disposition of inventory, as 100% of the value is included in income (as opposed to capital, of which only 50% is included). Nonetheless, the donation of inventory will result in tax credits that will at least offset the tax due on the disposition of the inventory.

Example:

Spock runs a bakery. His business is not incorporated, so all the income of the business is taxed at his personal rates during the year.

After Spock has deducted all of his expenses, he is left with taxable income in the year of $50,000. If Spock sells one more cake that is worth $100, he will pay tax on that cake of $31. However, upon donating the cake, he will be entitled to tax credits of approximately $40 (assuming that he has already made at least $200 of donations). Spock can then offset the tax owed by disposing of the last cake and using the additional $9 against the tax owing on his other $50,000 of income.

Of course, as income grows, so too does the tax rate, meaning that there are fewer leftover credits. In those provinces where the tax is equal to or greater than the credits generated by donation (which is all provinces except Alberta) there would be no additional tax credits leftover for use. In Alberta however, the credits will always more than offset the tax on the disposition of the donated item, even at the highest brackets. Given the number of provinces, the multiplicity of tax rates and brackets, and the frequency with which they change, an accountant should be retained to calculate the results of any donation of inventory.

PERSONAL USE PROPERTY

Personal Use Property (PUP) is property that is owned by the taxpayer and that is primarily for the personal use and enjoyment of the taxpayer or persons related to the taxpayer.

PUP includes:

- Bottles of wine
- Loyalty points programs
- Air Miles
- Shoppers Optimum points
- Religious items
- Gift certificates
- Clothes
- Artwork
- Hobby items
- Comic books
- Model trains
- Toys
- Land (e.g. a fishing hole)
- Books

Normally, when these types of items are donated to a charity, the charity does not issue a receipt, nor does the owner expect one. This is, in most cases, the appropriate treatment. However, technically it does not have to be so.

The ITA specifies that for donations of PUP, the minimum cost is deemed to be $1,000. This is true regardless of the actual cost to the owner. The ITA also deems the item sold for a minimum of $1,000, again regardless of the actual sale/donation value. So, when taken into the donor's tax return, there is no taxable event on items that are worth less than $1,000.

On the other hand, a tax receipt can still be issued for these types of items. The value on the receipt would reflect the item's fair market value. This receipt could then be used to generate some tax credits on the return (small though they may be). Charities should note, however, that valuing household items can be very difficult, and receipts should only be issued if value can be defensibly determined.

Example

Sulu bought a "Tickle Me Elmo" doll for $20. Shortly thereafter, it became a collector's item and the fair market value increased to $100. Realizing that there are needy children without a Tickle Me Elmo, Sulu donates the toy to a local charity. In return, he receives a tax receipt for the value of $100. On his tax return he calculates his capital gain as follows:

Deemed Proceeds of Disposition	$1,000
Deemed Cost	-$1,000
Capital Gain	0

As there is no capital gain, there is no tax payable. On the other hand, Sulu will receive a tax receipt for the fair market value of the doll ($100). Applying our assumptions (i.e. a tax rate of 46% and Sulu has already made at least $200 of donations), the $100 receipt will allow Sulu to claim back $46 of taxes owing from other sources.

The implication of this policy is that when items are donated which have an actual value greater than $1,000 but a cost lower than $1,000, the value of the donation will be enhanced because the amount of the capital gain will be reduced.

Example 2

McCoy decides to donate a model train set which he purchased for $100, but has it appraised in advance and discovers to his delight that it is actually worth $2,000.

McCoy still decides to donate the train set to a willing charity, which issues him a receipt for $2,000. He then calculates his taxes as follows:

Actual Proceeds of Disposition	$2,000
Deemed Cost	$1,000
Capital Gain	$1,000
Tax	$230
Tax Credits	$920
Total leftover credits	$690

There are three notes to make about the type of property donated.

First, make sure that the property is actually transferable. While loyalty program points are property, some plans will not allow you to transfer the points to anyone else, and so they effectively cannot be donated. In this scenario, a donor may consider redeeming the points and then donating the actual item. Of course, this may prove to be of limited assistance to a charity that all of a sudden finds itself obligated to use a plane ticket to some place it did not want to go, on a date it did not want to travel.

Second, both the individual and the charity must obtain a reliable valuation. From the perspective of the individual, an improper valuation could lead to a donation tax credit being disallowed by the CRA. The charity, on the other hand, has an obligation to issue proper receipts. So, if the receipts are overvalued, the charity may find itself facing uncomfortable questions from the CRA.

Finally, there are rules in the ITA which prevent situations where donors are buying and donating items that fall below the $1000 threshold simply to create tax receipts to shelter income from other sources. While the charity will not necessarily be punished if involved in such a scenario, the donor could have the receipts disallowed.

LISTED PERSONAL PROPERTY

Listed Personal Property (LPP) is a subclass of PUP. It consists of certain specific items which are held both as an investment and as hobby items. The list includes artwork, stamps, books, coins and sculptures. Unless it is Certified Canadian Cultural Property (see earlier in this article), LPP has the same tax treatment as PUP.

REAL ESTATE

Generally, the donation of most real estate will be treated like the donation of any other type of capital property. If the item is inventory, the donor will be taxed on the full proceeds of disposition, and, if the item is capital, the donor will only pay tax on 50% of the proceeds of disposition. There are, however, two significant exceptions to this rule.

Principal residence

The first exception is the donation of a principal residence. Canadian residents are not taxed on the gain arising from the appreciation of their principal residence. So, if a donor bought his home for $100,000 and sells (or donates) it when it is worth $1,000,000, no tax will be payable on the appreciation in value (assuming the home was the donor's principal residence for that entire time).

If the donor were to donate the home to a charity, not only would there be no tax consequences on the disposition, but he or she would receive a tax receipt equal to the fair market value of the home at the time of the donation.

In some cases, it might make sense for the donor to leave their home to a charity in their Will. By doing this, they might be able to use the tax credits from the donation to offset the income from the deemed disposition of their other assets, and carry back the credits to the previous year. In both the year of death and the year preceding death, the estate can use the tax credits to offset up to one hundred percent of the income. Given that the deemed disposition of assets (with the exception of the principal residence) usually results in a large income in the year of death, the donor might, in fact, be able to do some significant tax planning in this way.

Environmental property

The donation of environmental property has a treatment similar to that of Certified Cultural Property. The treatment applies where property is designated as ecologically sensitive land by the Minister of the Environment (or a person designated by the Minister) and donated to any of:

- The Federal or a Provincial Government;
- A municipality in Canada;
- A municipal or public body performing a function of government in Canada; or,
- A registered charity that has a main purpose (in the opinion of that Minister) of conserving and protecting Canada's environmental heritage, and that is approved by that Minister or that person in respect of the gift.

In any of these cases, there will be no taxable capital gain on the donation.

We have described the specific tax treatment of items donated where there is no tax on the capital gain of the item in the sections on public securities and certified cultural property. The only significant difference is that tax credits generated from a donation of this type may be carried forward for ten years. The entire value of the donation is available to offset tax owing from other sources at the highest rates.

RESIDUAL INTERESTS

It is possible to divide ownership of the property during one's life (called a life interest) from ownership upon the death of that person (called a residual interest). Once the residual interest is sold or given away, however, the property will belong to the owner of the residual interest when the owner of the life interest dies. A donor might consider this course of action in situations where they want to enjoy the income or use of the property during their lifetime and yet donate the property to the charity during their lifetime as opposed to on their death.

The value of the residual interest is calculated using an estimated value of the underlying property at the expected death of the donor (in itself determined from actuarial mortality tables) using present value dollars. This amount will be the value listed on the charity's donation receipt.

Determining the fair market value of a property at the expected death of the owner at some point in the future is a complicated mathematical task best left to a qualified actuary and appraiser.

From a tax perspective, when the owner divides the rights and donates the residual interest, the donor would generally incur a tax consequence. The tax owing will be a function of the cost of the right to the owner and its estimated value at the time of disposition. Generally speaking, this income will be treated as a capital gain. The capital gain is calculated according to a specific formula and depends on the gain in value of the residual interest relative to the entire property.

CHARITABLE REMAINDER TRUST

A trust is a legal device which effectively accomplishes one or both of the following objectives:

- It separates the ownership of property (the capital interest) from the right to receive income from the property (the income interest); and,
- It can separate the person who legally controls the property from those entitled to benefit from it.

A Charitable Remainder Trust (CRT) is similar to the donation of a residual interest in that it allows the donor to donate the capital of the trust now, but the charity does not receive it until some later point (such as on the death of the donor). A CRT is particularly useful in situations where it is difficult to record the division of interests on title (such as artwork). Despite its legal potency, creating a CRT is simply a matter of signing the appropriate legal documents.

When a donor creates a CRT, they dispose of the residual interest in the property to the trust and then donates the certain rights in the trust to the charity (the "capital interest"). It is important to note that the donation in this case occurs when the owner transfers the interest in the trust to the charity. Thus, if the underlying property is, for example, publicly traded securities, the gift of an interest in the trust will not attract the same favourable tax treatment as donating the securities would have; it is a donation of an interest in a trust, not of securities.

The special tax treatment assigned to different types of property outlined elsewhere in this chapter (i.e., ecological property, publicly traded securities or certified cultural property) likely makes them inappropriate candidates for this type of donation.

It is important not to create the trust with the charity as the beneficiary, because if the donor is not careful they will gift an interest in the trust with no property (and thus no value on the receipt), and any subsequent disposition to the trust will not be considered a gift by the CRA. The appropriate method is instead to create the trust with the donor holding both interests in the trust.

The donor then contributes the assets to the trust, and finally donates the capital interest to the charity. Of course, the donor would retain the income interest for herself as long as is set out in the trust deed.

GIFTS TO U.S. CHARITIES

Individuals who reside in Canada and commute to their employment or place of business in the United States are allowed to deduct donations made to U.S. charitable organizations on the same terms as donations made to Canadian organizations.

There are, however, a number of other important conditions which must be met. Firstly, the commuter must live near the American border during the whole of the taxation year. Secondly, their U.S. employment or business income must represent the donor's chief source of income for that year. Thirdly, the donor must be able to demonstrate that the gift was made to a religious, charitable, scientific, literary or educational organization created or organized in or under the laws of the United States. Finally, they must be able to demonstrate that such a gift would be allowed as a deduction under the United States Internal Revenue Code. Where all those conditions are met, the donations in question are treated as donations made to a registered charity.

VOLUNTEER SERVICES

The ITA makes it very clear that only a gift to a charity is receiptable. A gift includes property or a right to property.

Unfortunately, services do not qualify as property and, therefore are not receiptable.

GIFT BY WILL

One legal requirement of a gift is actual delivery of the gift to the recipient. However, where a gift is made by Will, such delivery is impossible until after the death of the person – sometimes well after. Under normal circumstances, the gift would not be complete until delivery is made. However, the law allows that where a gift is made by Will, it will be considered to have been made by the deceased in the few seconds preceding death, assuming of course that delivery occurs at some point after the death. In this way, the tax credits that are generated by the donation can be applied to the donor's year of death. This is particularly useful as there is often a large tax bill owing on death.

The law allows for certain differences from a strict calculation perspective. As previously discussed, a donor is generally only entitled to offset 75% of their taxable income using donation tax credits in a given year.

However, in the year of death (i.e. from January 1st until the date of the donor's death) the donor is entitled to offset up to 100% of their income, as filed by their executor. Any unused donation tax credits can be carried back one year, to the year preceding death, and be used to offset 100% of the tax debt owing in that year as well as the tax in the first three taxation years of the estate. One stipulation though is that the gift must be transferred (and accepted) by the qualified donee within three years of the death. Obviously, if the return for the year preceding death has already been filed, then it will be necessary to file an adjustment request in order to claim the donation tax credits.

BOOKS AND RECORDS

The Canadian income tax system is based upon the principle of honest self-reporting. Consequently, one of the most pervasive issues facing charities is the maintenance of proper books and records. The importance of the issue is underlined when it is understood that charities are usually in the process of proving their innocence rather than disproving their guilt. Without records, this is close to impossible. Indeed, if the charity were to appeal a decision of revocation of its status by the CRA, it would not even be entitled to give oral testimony. So, the importance of well maintained records is paramount.

What are books and records?

There is no standard definition of books and records. Fundamentally, however, an organization must have sufficient evidence to show that it is in compliance with the Act. To be clear, destroying evidence that an organization is not in compliance will not help the organization, as the lack of documents, in and of itself, is an offence. (Although the documents could be evidence of an offence with a more grievous penalty.)

There is a difference between the two concepts of 'books' and 'records'. 'Books' is not a defined term in the Income Tax Act, but is typically understood to be accounting records. A 'record' is defined and includes "an account, an agreement, a book, a charter table, a diagram, a form, an image, an invoice, a letter, a map, a memorandum, a plan, a return, a statement, a telegram, a voucher, and any other thing containing information whether written or in any other form."

No distinction is made in law between corporate and transactional records, but it is helpful to organize a charity by thinking in these terms. Corporate records are those documents required by law to define a corporation and its governance. They are often created with the co-operation of a government office, and are required so that the corporation meets certain statutory requirements.

Transactional records are those created by the organization to keep track of its operations and meetings. They still help the corporation meet its requirements under the law.

Corporate Records

A corporate entity must maintain current copies of its constituting documents (Articles of Incorporation, Articles of Continuance, Letters of Patent, Supplementary Letters of Patent, etc.), bylaws and minutes of meetings or resolutions. Organizations operating in more than one province would also be expected to have copies of their extra-provincial registration.

Meetings

Compliance with the various corporate acts requires minutes of meetings of both directors and members. Members generally meet annually while directors generally meet more often – both should have records of all of their formal meetings. If issues are discussed at informal meetings it is a good idea to make records of those as well. Often, the fact that it had the discussion is in itself valuable and it would be unwise for a charity to self-censor its minutes.

Format

There is no specific requirement that the record of happenings at meetings be kept in any particular way for the CRA's purposes (although for purposes of consistency, groups may wish to follow standard processes). Therefore, meetings that simply have notes of what was said and confirmed as accurate by the bulk of the attendees at the meeting are sufficient for most purposes.

Keep in mind that most corporate statutes do mandate that certain issues be dealt with by the members and / or directors and there may be technical requirements be met in the resolution.

Transactional Records

The vast majority of records held by a charity are its 'transactional' records. They are created by the day-to-day transactions of the organization and include its bank account statements, cheques, records of employee payment, invoices, statements of account, deposit books, etc. These are generally easy records for the organization to obtain as they are created by third parties. The challenge for most charities is to organize these records into some logical format in order that their T3010 can be produced at the end of the year. This role generally falls to a bookkeeper or some other individual prepared to keep these records.

On the assumption that the bulk of these records are being created by a third party, and that the charity simply needs to keep them, the charity will not face any difficulty in ensuring that its transactions are properly maintained. However, there are situations in which a charity faces difficulties because it is in a non-commercial or non-traditional setting.

Charities that engage in relief of poverty may find it difficult to track the expenditures with which they give alms to the poor. This can be obvious in a situation where the charity distributes food to individuals that simply need it or seem to need it. While the CRA is obviously aware that a charity is engaged in the provision of food for the hungry, it may ask how it can be certain that food is being given only to the poor and is not, for example, being distributed to the employees of the organization or being sold. While the CRA can be forgiving in such situations, it can, in some cases, be extremely difficult to ensure that records are maintained, to demonstrate that the charity's resources are being properly used.

Some foreign countries present another problem in that often the normal transactional records we would expect in Canada – say on the purchase of office supplies – simply may not exist there. Receipts and invoices are simply not used in some parts of the world. Charities should seek alternate means to track their resources.

Additional Records

Again, while there is no legal definition of 'additional records' these may include emails, or letters to the organization — and they may include records that the organization purposely creates in order that the CRA, if it ever looks to see, will accept as proof that the organization is properly meeting its responsibilities. Emails to and from the organization and letters to the organization must clearly be maintained. Charity officials should be careful to separate out their personal from official comments as an official may be unable to claim privacy over these emails. Moreover, emails between individuals may not necessarily be entered into the charity's records (say in a situation where they are not being saved by a corporate server). In these circumstances, directors should make sure to copy the charity so that the charity's obligations to keep records is met.

Creating Records

The organization may also seek to create records in order to show that it meets the legal tests involved. For example, to ensure that a charity's resources are properly used in a foreign country the charity may have the volunteer's make reports, take pictures or record videos that are not otherwise necessary. Obviously, a charity must first understand the legal principle that it seeks to establish before creating the record. On this point, the charity should seek legal advice before proceeding.

Fundamentally, it is important that a charity understand what it must show in its records in order to comply with the law should the CRA investigate. Continuous education regarding a charity's obligations is critical so that the administration of the organization understands when to ask for reports of directors or others in whatever circumstances.

Where must they be kept?

The books and records of an organization must be kept, by law, at its registered office address. This however, is often an impossible task because the legal documents may be more easily kept at a lawyer's office, accounting records may be with the accountant, and other records may be with the organization. It can be inconvenient and costly to keep all the records in one place – particularly if they are voluminous.

The CRA seems to understand the practical difficulties in this aspect and does not, as a matter of course, seek to confirm the particular location of these records. In the course of an audit, CRA auditors generally either ask for information to be provided to them or meet at a mutually convenient location where the records are produced.

Nevertheless, we have seen instances where charities lose track of the location of their documents and so it would be wise for an organization to be aware of its records should they have to be produced.

Electronic Record Keeping

Nowadays, more and more records are either created in paper format for conversion to electronic format or in electronic format able to be printed at any time. Obviously, the CRA is as much interested in easy record-keeping as anybody else, and rules do exist for doing so electronically. These rules are outlined in two technical documents from the CRA, IC78-10R5 and IC 05-1R1.

An organization that keeps electronic records must be able to provide them in an electronically readable and useable format to the CRA auditors so that they can be read on CRA equipment (although not every CRA department will accept electronic documents). For most modern records this is not an issue, as long as they can be produced in PDF format. A regular problem is that the organization uses a bookkeeping or accounting software unknown to the CRA. However, as these records can often be converted from one format to another, there is usually a workaround. Electronic files can be encrypted, but the password must be provided to the CRA if requested.

If a record was originally created in paper format and then converted to electronic, the paper does not need to be kept. However, an electronic record must always be kept, even if converted from one format to another.

The CRA does allow for the keeping of these records online in the cloud. However, their requirement is that the server be located in Canada or at least that a copy of the records be maintained on a server in Canada.

One difficulty that arises from time to time — and it does not apply only to electronic records — is the accidental destruction of records. With paper records this can happen in terms of a fire or some other disaster, but with electronic records the loss of a USB key could undermine years of work by the organization. For this reason, electronic records should be copied and kept in safe, redundant locations as much as possible. If records are lost, the CRA may seek proof or a reason for such a loss and may be forgiving in the circumstance. However, there's no guarantee that the CRA will take this approach, and you can assume that the CRA auditors have heard the “dog ate my homework” type of excuse more often than most teachers.

How long to keep records

Generally speaking, all books and records must be kept for a minimum of six years from the end of the last tax year from which they relate. The tax year end is the same as the fiscal year end for the corporation, but is, by definition, the calendar year end for trusts and unincorporated associations. For purposes of the Employment Insurance Act and the Canada Pension Plan Act, the retention period begins at the end of the calendar year to which the books and records relate.

Technically, duplicate donation receipts of a registered charity (other than receipts for donations of property, which may be held for longer periods of time) is two years from the end of the calendar year in which the donations were made — but it would be inadvisable for a charity to rely on this specific requirement rather than the general one.

The obligations above relate to the Income Tax Act, but it is important to understand that obligations also exist in the various corporate acts. Typically, Corporate Records (as opposed to Transactional Records) are not destroyed.

Who Can See Records

Outside of the civil litigation — in which a Plaintiff or Defendant could be compelled to produce documents relating to the litigation — there are really three groups of individuals who may be able to see various parts of corporate records. The directors, the members and government officials each have different levels of access to the charity's records — depending upon the circumstances.

What Language

The law requires that books and records be kept in either English or French.

Organizations that operate overseas typically have records in another language, and while technically the organization should have them translated as they are produced, practically this is often an expensive task. Moreover, CRA audit procedures limit an audit to a certain number of years, translating every document as it comes through may be unnecessary for years that are not under audit.

Even for years under audit, the CRA at times requests just sample documents, so the charity may be in the position of translating documents that will never be read.

Generally, the CRA allows a period of time for the production of documents, and understands that organizations operating in non-English or French-speaking parts of the world will have documents in other languages. Indeed, if someone sends an email to an organization in a language that is not English the organization can hardly be faulted for the fact that its books and records are only in English or French.

WHAT KIND OF FUTURE DO WE WANT?

Climate Change and Restoration

This last year was full of unexpected dark twists and turns. But, in many ways, the global pandemic has proved that we're capable of coming together to take extraordinary action to meet existential threats head on. As we begin our return to normal, we will have a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to re-define what that normal is: What kind of future do we want?

Canada has some of the world's last remaining wilderness, yet our wildlife is struggling.

Our Living Planet Report Canada 2020 found that nationally at-risk species populations fell, on average, by 59 per cent since 1970. At the same time, climate change is accelerating this devastating loss of nature.

What could this mean, when we consider the future? Think of a child who, at this moment, is 5 years old. When they are 15 years old, there will be worsening wildfires, floods, droughts, avalanches and heatwaves. When they are 30, Arctic summer sea ice will have all but disappeared, affecting weather worldwide and threatening the foundation of Arctic ecosystems. When they are 50, sea levels will continue to rise, affecting coastal communities. When they are 75, our planet could be up to four degrees warmer. Countless species will go extinct and large parts of the Earth will be uninhabitable.

Like a lot of people, these scenarios keep me up at night. But I also have hope, because I know it doesn't have to turn out this way. We have the power to change the outcome – to meet these threats head on.

I know this because of the incredible impact WWF-Canada has had on nature and wildlife over the last 50 years. We've helped beluga whale populations in the St. Lawrence recover, secured commitments to keep mining development out of caribou calving grounds, and safeguarded countless species through the restoration and protection of habitats across the country. This work was only possible thanks to the support of our donors, including those who left gifts, big and small, to WWF-Canada as part of their Will; a way to ensure that their commitment to nature lives on.

Now, our beautiful planet faces a critical tipping point. We know the next ten years will be crucial to reversing catastrophic wildlife loss and preventing greater climate breakdown. That's why WWF-Canada's new strategic vision was developed as a ten-year plan -- one that can change the trajectory of the planet and create space where nature and humans can thrive.

Our work over the next decade will focus on protecting biodiversity and mitigating climate change by strengthening and protecting natural systems. We will restore one million hectares of lost habitat and steward 100 million hectares of intact habitat, to safeguard our at-risk species. We will protect areas that sequester carbon from the atmosphere and reduce the destruction of carbon stores. We will seek guidance and wisdom from Indigenous partners to ensure our work is inclusive and long-lasting. And we will reinvigorate people and communities to take action for wildlife.

Megan Leslie

These are bold, ambitious goals – but with your help, we know they can be achieved. Wildlife will be given the chance to recover and we will help the climate stabilize.

Think of that five-year-old child again. Today, they're helping to grow native flowers in their grandparent's garden and chasing the butterflies that stop by. When they turn 15, Canada will have protected 30 per cent of its land and freshwater. When they turn 30, the importance of Indigenous guidance and knowledge is widely understood, and everyone is living within the finite limits of the planet. When they turn 50, wildlife populations will be thriving. When they travel the country, they will see bats in the night sky, fireflies in the fields and visit oceans with enough food for whales and people. When they turn 75, our climate will be in balance. Simply put, nature and people are thriving together.

This is the future you have the power to help create. By supporting WWF-Canada, you will be part of a movement of people, today, and in the future, who are helping restore forests, wetlands, ocean and freshwater systems so nature can do its job. We're truly grateful for every single contribution. Your support helps us invest in and protect nature, so it can protect us.

CHARITABLE DONATIONS

How to Become the Perfect Donor

Before making a donation to an organization, some will go through a thorough process and do their due diligence while others will base their decisions on spontaneity and emotion. However, the best approach to donating probably lies somewhere in the middle. This Guide offers some tips to help donors add new strings to their bow when it comes to charitable giving.

The relative importance of organizational performance indicators

Browse the web and you will easily find them: annual rankings of charities, which supposedly assess the performance of organizations. These rankings all have one thing in common: they praise lower overhead costs. The fixation on this particular indicator reinforces the need for charities to be more conservative with their expenses. It is therefore hardly surprising that so few organizations were technologically prepared when the pandemic hit, with many of them not having updated their IT equipment and practices in years. By championing this measure of “performance,” we ask charities to cut corners and work miracles, all the while expecting them to deal with constant increases to rent, IT-related costs and salaries. Dan Pallotta, author of several books on philanthropy and the famous TED Talk The way we think about charity is dead wrong, sums it well: the message we send to organizations is “don’t be competitive and think small”!

Let's look beyond overhead once and for all

This doesn't mean giving leeway to limitless spending. Boards of directors are responsible for assessing risks and markets, and charities should be able to explain, for instance, why their IT expenses skyrocketed in 2020 to equip their staff as they began working from home, or why they launched a big media campaign (and had to report on its impact as well). That being said, can we agree on giving a break to the overhead discussion and putting it aside (or at least, off-centre) once and for all?

We know that staff (and volunteers) who are happy and feel supported at work are usually more productive, and who would argue against an organization being more productive? So, what if we adopt a different lens and ask ourselves the following questions:

- Does this charity pay its employees well?
- Does the organization's compensation structure allow it to compete in the market to recruit and retain the best talent?
- Does the organization appropriately recognize contributions made by its volunteers?
- Do the board directors fully embrace their role and make annual donations to the charity?

Daniel H. Lanteigne

Be bold

However, don't try to work around the situation by accepting higher overhead while asking for your donation to be invested “directly and entirely for the cause.” This may, of course, work for donors looking for “impact” from their dollars; however, it restricts organizational development, potential growth, and evolution. Instead, let's aim to support more than the mission or a project. Let's support boldness and allow the organizations that are dear to our hearts to increase their donor base and to boost their reputation by investing in their marketing and recruiting activities, among others.

Almost ready to make a donation

Once you've adopted your new donor mindset, you may feel ready to act on it and make a donation.

However, there are additional things to consider. Did you know that, unlike registered charities, non-profits cannot issue official donation receipts offering you a deduction or tax credit with your tax return? If receiving such a receipt is important to you, check the Canada Revenue Agency website to find out whether the organization you've chosen is registered.

Next, before you hit the donate button or send your cheque, make sure you trust the organization and feel confident that your money will be put to good use.

Caring for Animals Means Caring for Their People: Legacy Gifts can do Both for Marginalized Communities

For already marginalized communities, the cost of caring for a companion animal, including veterinary care, can be prohibitive. Indeed, a recent study published in the journal Frontiers in Veterinary Science found that, among adults in British Columbia, those facing low income, unemployment, housing insecurity, and other factors covered by the Canadian Index of Multiple Deprivation (CIMD) were more likely to surrender their companion animals to shelters. The CIMD uses four factors of social vulnerability: Ethnocultural Composition, Economic Dependency, Residential Instability and Situational Vulnerability. Residential Instability in particular was shown to be a factor that predicted increased risk of surrender of an animal.

This is where the Regional Animal Protection Society (RAPS) shines brightest. The RAPS' bottom line is not profit. It is helping animals ... and their people. We understand that caring for animals demands that we recognize and ameliorate the challenges facing their guardians. RAPS has been saving and improving the lives of animals in Metro Vancouver for 25 years. We are a no-kill animal-serving organization that operates Canada's largest cat sanctuary, an adoption centre, a fostering network, a Pet Food Bank, three social enterprise thrift stores and, since 2018, the community-owned, not-for-profit RAPS Animal Hospital. We are also now in the process of fundraising to build B.C.'s largest no-kill dog sanctuary. For a quarter-century we have been assisting animals in households facing economic challenges. Our Pet Food Bank ensures no one has to choose between feeding themselves or feeding their companion animal. Since opening the RAPS Animal Hospital, we have been able to expand our help exponentially because veterinary care is often the most daunting economic challenge pet owners face.

RAPS, through donor supported funds, provides interest-free payment plans for people who cannot afford upfront vet care and we provide the only gift cards for veterinarian services that offer 50 per cent additional benefits on each card.

We are proud to have developed community partnerships that encourage resilience among the most vulnerable Canadians. We work with agencies like the Salvation Army homeless shelter and emergency housing for those experiencing domestic violence to provide vet care to animals who are the companions of people who are homeless or in emergency or transitional housing. The relationships between these people and their animals are often the most significant connections in their lives. We recognize that helping people get their lives back on track means supporting the relationships that give them strength.

The impacts of veterinary care, such as examinations and vaccinations, can be astronomical. For example, the unfortunate truth is that a person who is experiencing domestic violence is 70% more likely to remain in the situation longer or return to it sooner if there is a pet in the house. This disturbing fact is one of many indications of the unintended consequences on humans of housing policies that discriminate against companion animals. A review done a couple of years ago indicated that, of Canada's 452 women's shelters, just eight accept pets. There is little reason to believe that much of significance has changed since then.

That is why RAPS provides compassionate boarding for people fleeing domestic violence, so that they can enter temporary housing while knowing that their animals are safe. Similarly, we provide free examinations and vaccinations through the RAPS Animal Hospital for those entering transitional or social housing where pets are allowed. This provides the pet guardians with the documentation required to be able to bring those animals with them into the safe environment. We hope to convince more homeless and transitional shelters to accept pets with RAPS Animal Hospital's help.

Our hope is to open our veterinary hospital 24 hours per day and 7 days per week which would save pet owners over $10 million in veterinary charges each year. And our other goal is to provide the first real Animal Ambulance in the region. We believe this model of animal health care will revolutionize the veterinarian industry with a focus on animals and their people.

Many consider legacy gifts to animal-assisting charities or human-assisting ones but, in reality, helping animals also has an enormous impact on the wellbeing of their guardians.

PERSPECTIVE

Voices of Indigenous-Led Philanthropy

For members of the Potlotek First Nation in Cape Breton, finding fresh fruit and vegetables on the reserve is difficult. There's a small grocery store about ten minutes away, but its produce section is nothing to write home about. Finding decent fresh produce means travelling 55 kms from home.

However, food security for the community is about to change, thanks to Ulnooweg. (See inset.)

The word Ulnooweg, pronounced ["Ul-noo-wegg"], is a Mi'kmaq word which broadly translated means: "To make indigenous or to adapt beliefs, and customs of the Mi'kmaq".

Tahirih Paul, Economic Development Officer for Potlotek First Nation, was looking for solutions to their food security challenges when she was approached by staff of Ulnooweg Development Group's Digital Mi'kmaq project, who are now leading a Community Garden and Food Security project, featuring a geothermal greenhouse.

Funding is provided to qualified donee communities via the Ulnooweg Indigenous Communities Foundation (see inset) and United Way Halifax

Once complete, the project will include a field garden, large-scale potting shed and a food centre.

The objectives of the Community Garden and Food Security project are:

- To celebrate the principles of Netukulimk, ecological sustainability and sustainable livelihoods for food providers. Netukulimk is "the use of the natural bounty provided by the Creator for the self-support and well-being of the individual and the community. Netukulimk is achieving adequate standards of community nutrition and economic well-being without jeopardizing the integrity, diversity, or productivity of our environment."

- Create and provide additional means and opportunities for community members to actively engage in all aspects of the food system.
- Increase the quality and availability of healthy, locally grown foods.
- Provide more opportunity for food to be celebrated as central to both culture and community.

The greenhouse project is a way to begin addressing years of difficulties for the region's Indigenous peoples.

The long-term vision of Ulnooweg is to expand the initiative to Indigenous communities across the country.

Ulnooweg Education Centre (see inset) - Digital Mi'kmaq, originally a project of the Ulnooweg Development Corporation, is now housed at the Ulnooweg Education Centre, founded in 2013, whose goal is "to create lasting foundational change for a new generation through the interplay of science, culture, education and digital skills."

Mi'kmaq are offspring of the Ulnooweg Development Group Inc., a remarkable non-profit organization providing loans and business services to Indigenous entrepreneurs since 1986.

Ulnooweg Indigenous Community Foundation (inset on following page)

At the initiative of the Development Corporation, this unique organization was created in 2018. The Ulnooweg Indigenous Communities Foundation has made possible some of the most inspirational examples of Indigenous-led philanthropy.

The Foundation is working to strengthen the relationship between Canada's philanthropic sector and the Indigenous Communities of Atlantic Canada. Its members and directors are chiefs and leaders from the Mi'kmaq and Maliseet communities of the Atlantic region.

Executive Director of the Foundation, Christopher Googoo, says "The Foundation is taking a leadership role in closing the gap between the philanthropic sector and Indigenous communities. As an indigenous-led foundation, it is our goal to create new funds, pursue investment opportunities and increase public understanding of the opportunities for Indigenous communities and philanthropy to come together in an era of reconciliation."

The Foundation works to harness the potential of youth leaders, promote opportunities to access culture and language, build meaningful educational pathways, and support the transition to employment and entrepreneurship.

Kris Archie, CEO of The Circle on Philanthropy and Aboriginal Peoples in Canada (“The Circle”), calls the Ulnooweg Indigenous Community Foundation “a pre-eminent example of Indigenous-led philanthropy, an organization working under its own sovereignty.”

Qualified Donee Status – Opportunities to build the relationships between Indigenous communities and the philanthropic sector

An analysis by The Circle on Philanthropy and Aboriginal Peoples in 2017 showed only a tiny percentage (1%) of Canada’s registered charities are “Indigenous-focused”.

A miniscule amount of charitable dollars go to Indigenous groups annually, less than two cents of every dollar donated.

Charity lawyer Richard Bridge has helped Atlantic First Nations to secure Qualified Donee status. (An essay by Richard on the origins of Ulnooweg innovation can be found in the October 2015 edition of “The Philanthropist”.) Twenty-eight Mi’kmaq and Maliseet communities and two tribal council organizations are now registered.

I spoke with charity lawyer Richard Bridge, who says:

“Securing qualified donee status is the easiest way for Indigenous-governing organizations to connect with the philanthropic sector.

- Qualified donees are able to issue tax receipts for donations and to receive grants from registered charities. First Nations governments are eligible for this status as ‘public bodies performing a function of government in Canada’.
- To secure Qualified Donee status, First Nations must register with Canada Revenue Agency. There are 634 First Nations in Canada and at the moment approximately 400 have registered.
- Generally speaking, a First Nation that is a qualified donee has greater latitude than do registered charities when it comes to the use of resources as it receives through donations and grants.

- Like a municipal or provincial government, a First Nation can use its resources for activities it deems in the community’s best interest. They are not bound by all of the limitations that apply to charities. This is subject to any conditions imposed on specific donations or grants by donors or grant makers.”

Impact

In Richard Bridge’s words, “For leaders in the philanthropic sector who want to have impact, there are immediate opportunities for co-operation with Indigenous communities and organizations to advance virtually every field of charitable endeavor, through:

- grant-making to First Nations that are qualified donees and Indigenous charities,
- investments in Indigenous projects or enterprises,
- building philanthropic relationships and community infrastructure.”

Richard continues, “This, in turn, will reduce the intolerable gaps documented elsewhere regarding poverty, health, income, employment, and other indicators of well-being.

In my view, it is essential for the philanthropic sector to turn more energy, experience, and resources to building new constructive relationships with Indigenous communities across the country.

I believe that innovative approaches to all aspects of community development and health that help Indigenous communities achieve greater self-reliance and prosperity should be priorities.”

The Circle on Philanthropy and Aboriginal Peoples in Canada – Reframing the Narrative of Being ‘Charitable’

The Circle on Philanthropy and Aboriginal Peoples in Canada is an extraordinary organization that connects with and supports the empowerment of First Nations, Inuit and Métis nations, communities, and individuals, in building a stronger, healthier future.

Ulnooweg Development Group Incorporated (a non-profit organization)

Purposes are to promote the economic and social welfare of Aboriginal individuals, families and communities primarily in Atlantic Canada by providing financial services which can include loans and related business support services, and training and education, to Aboriginal businesses, entrepreneurs, First Nation Governments and community organizations.

Ulnooweg Education Centre (a charitable organization)

Purposes are to advance education in First Nations communities in Canada and Indigenous communities outside Canada by:

- teaching financial, accounting, economic, governance, business and strategic planning principles, practices and skills through courses, training, workshops, presentations and counseling sessions;
- developing and delivering courses, programs, training, workshops, presentations and counselling sessions that help children, youth and adults develop knowledge and skills relating to
- fostering employment and career opportunities, ecology, health and Indigenous culture and language; and
- conducting research into the social, financial, economic, demographic, and development conditions, needs and opportunities of these communities.

The Ulnooweg Indigenous Communities Foundation (a charitable foundation)

Purposes of the Corporation are:

- To receive and maintain a fund or funds and to apply all or part of the principal and income therefrom, from time to time, to qualified donees, as defined in subsection 149.1(1) of the Income Tax Act (Canada); and
- To advance education by providing publicly available scholarships and bursaries to Indigenous students to be used for post-secondary education.

CEO Kris Archie is a leading voice in Canada on Indigenous-led philanthropy. An impassioned and articulate woman from the Ts'qescen First Nation in BC, Kris speaks directly to the issues while painting a picture of the situation today in the charitable sector.

In Kris Archie's words, "White settler-created philanthropy is often characterized as traditional, Eurocentric, or Western, involving intentions of goodwill – an act or gift done or made for humanitarian purposes.

Missing from the narrative of settler philanthropy are the stories and practices behind wealth accumulation generated on taken land and on the backs of Indigenous peoples.

It is important to acknowledge the legacy of harm and entitlement attached to philanthropic dollars in order to build relationships of transparency and trust."

Kris says "When white settlers hear the words "Indigenous Philanthropy", they are thinking of donations that go to Indigenous organizations. I am speaking about Indigenous-led philanthropy. Indigenous-led philanthropy is much broader than white settler philanthropy.

Indigenous-led philanthropy embodies many generations of laws, it's about ethical use of resources, about being in deep relation to Nature, it's about knowledge transfer.

Indigenous-led philanthropy is all-embracing, a set of behaviours related to how we walk in this world. And these behaviours not only support the immediate community but has a ripple effect to other communities.

"We are trying to re-frame the narrative of being 'charitable' and work with people who recognize the need to do the work differently. Indigenous philanthropy has more to do with reciprocity, time and cultural context." – Kris Archie, The Circle

Roberta Jamieson, a renowned Canadian lawyer and Indigenous advocate, is also eloquent on this subject:

"The traditional philanthropic paradigm is a transaction: one gives, the other receives. This concept is alien to most Indigenous communities whose giving stresses reciprocity, where givers become receivers who become givers.

If we want to change outcomes in Indigenous communities, the first step for donors is self-reflection. Philanthropic organizations need to understand that cash cannot buy relationships – nor can it be a substitute or human involvement – and they need to see that transparency, trust, and compliance are natural components of good relationships".

For the philanthropic sector and Indigenous communities to work together more constructively, there is a need to build new relationships, understanding, co-operation, and infrastructure.

Reciprocal Philanthropy

Roberta Jamieson shares her insights. "One of the changes that is required, if philanthropic organizations want a constructive relationship with Indigenous communities, is to recognize and embrace reciprocity.

Reciprocity is the foundation that underpins all our relationships; it is the lens through which we look at all relationships, both human and non-human. Reciprocity is the essence of how we give and receive. It maintains the cycle of life and the sustainability of our people."

"I honour you by giving, you honour me by receiving." – Rebecca Anderson, Indigenous rights advocate.

There are several examples of Indigenous-led initiatives taking place across the country from which we can learn. Here are just two quick examples:

Coast Funds, based in the Great Bear

Rainforest - Coast Funds was created in 2007 "out of mutual recognition by conservationists, First Nations, industry, and government that a sustainable economy is vital to conservation efforts in the Great Bear Rainforest and Haida Gwaii areas of British Columbia."

Another Indigenous-led organization, this one run by youth, is the Ontario Youth Indigenous Partnership Project (OYIPP), which supports Indigenous youth living in Ontario to engage in their communities through projects that promote environmental, social, spiritual, and physical well-being. In addition to access to grants, youth have opportunities be mentored – or be mentors – to participate in skills training, and to connect with other youth, partners, and funders.

In closing

We hope sharing part of the Ulnooweg story, and hearing from these other leading voices, has opened a door for us to explore the pioneering work being done in this area.

There is a wealth of research, articles and other documents about Indigenous Philanthropy.

It is my hope we in the mainstream charitable sector will explore more deeply the tremendous potential for building relationships while learning from practitioners of Indigenous-Led Philanthropy.

CHARITABLE SECTOR

Covid Upends Charitable Playbook

For Canadian charities, innovation is one path to success

A healthy December bump eased what would otherwise have been a dismal year for Canadian charities. They will remember 2020 as a time of painful disruption, when virus-fighting measures stemmed or halted the flow of donations.

Overall giving fell 4% in Canada last year, according to RBC data. The decline masked some sharp divergences within the sector, with some organizations seeing increased contributions and others getting nothing—literally.

“I think the thing that’s going to persist is that many of these organizations to survive, they had to become online overnight,” said Kelly Schmitt, incoming CEO of Benevity, whose software helps coordinate giving and volunteering, on a recent episode of Disruptors, an RBC podcast. “There’s been no charity galas, no golf tournaments. The fundraising activity that they used to do just completely dried up.”

Charitable giving has fallen in times of recession before. It dropped sharply in the 2008-2009 financial crisis, declining more than 5% in each year according to Statistics Canada (data for 2020 is not yet available). This time around, what was an existential crisis for some was an opportunity for others to innovate—to embrace new technologies and platforms to reach longstanding supporters, and attract new ones.

The pandemic dealt an uneven blow to Canada’s charities

Almost 42% of organizations that had received donations in 2019 got less in 2020, according to RBC data. The combined damage amounted to $60 million less in donations. Some charities did fine; 27% received zero dollars in 2020.

The biggest collective hit came in May, early in the pandemic, when giving plunged 30% from a year earlier. In December, donations rose 21% from a year earlier, as many Canadians rushed to lock in contributions before the end of the tax year.

Small, grassroots organizations are at greatest risk, according to a report from Imagine Canada, a non-profit that promotes the work of thousands of Canadian charities. They tend to have fewer financial reserves, and many of their typical donors were hit hard by the economic downturn. ”

Moment of reckoning

The international aid sector is having a moment of reckoning. Development and humanitarian organizations are pressed to look inward and ask themselves how the legacy of colonialism manifests in their work. Embracing anti-racism requires de-colonizing aid to ensure that those experiencing poverty, discrimination and injustice have the resources and the power to drive change for good.

Supporting local organizations to lead emergency responses when disaster strikes, providing core funding to grassroots women rights organizations and ensuring community-led development. These are all the right and smart things to do. So, why is this so hard?

Because aid organizations based in the 'Global North' hold resources and power that they must relinquish to make space for those who have historically been excluded. Giving up power and letting others sit in the driver's seat is never easy. Our drive to decolonize aid is rooted in our vision of a just, sustainable future. We want a future that isn't dictated by power and privilege but rather lifted up by the joy of equality. We know that shifting power and resources closer to the grassroots makes profound and lasting change - just look at the past few years in the Philippines.

In the Philippines, 15 per cent of girls are married before their 18th birthday, and two per cent are married before they turn 15 years old. The impacts of child, early and forced marriage are stark. It subjects young girls to violations of their right to health, education and safety. It raises the likelihood of girls dropping out of school. It increases the risk of complications or death due to childbirth. It pushes women and girls towards economic vulnerability. It increases the likelihood of domestic violence. Fundamentally, it means the loss of their childhood. And that is why several women's rights organizations and Oxfam Pilipinas have been working together to make the proposed Girls Not Brides Act a law – making child marriage illegal, where, if passed, any person who facilitates and/or performs a marriage would be criminally prosecuted.

In 2019, Senator Hontiveros, a Filipino politician and community advocate filed Senate Bill 1373, the 'Girls Not Brides Act of 2019'. And on November 9, 2020 a historic moment was reached as the bill passed the third and final reading in the Senate. As of this writing, only review in the House of Representatives remains.

Our projects with partners in the Philippines work to change local norms and laws that perpetuate violence and provide support to women and girls who are survivors of violence. Local women's advocates and organizations are at the heart of this work – organizations like the Girl Defenders Movement mobilized hundreds of people to comment on the proposed law and made sure that the perspectives of girls were incorporated into the amendments.

Shifting power in our movement is about making space for local leadership. This is critical to driving lasting community change. It is about ensuring that the people most impacted by an issue have the space and resources they need to drive the change they want to see. And it's about recognizing that charity alone cannot end poverty, because poverty is not just about money. It is about systems that perpetuate inequality and injustice. We must challenge the systems that keep people poor – that is the key to a just and sustainable future.

Prevailing Priorities of Indigenous-Led Charities

Sharon Redsky

In Canada, Indigenous-led charities are vital to many communities, including where I live in Winnipeg, Manitoba. These organizations deliver culturally appropriate services that holistically support Indigenous families. In turn, Indigenous people feel a sense of belonging and develop the resiliency needed to work toward undoing the damages of colonialism and recognizing our own potential.

However, while demand for culturally appropriate, high quality, evidence-based services is growing, many Indigenous organizations survive year-to-year primarily on project based funding, despite only a small portion of grants being allocated to these communities. According to the report 2017 Measuring the Circle: Emerging Trends in Philanthropy for First Nations, Métis and Inuit Communities in Canada, conducted in Manitoba, less than two% of philanthropic dollars went to Indigenous charities. More shockingly, this figure includes giving to Indigenous-focused charities that serve Indigenous peoples and to Indigenous-led charities that serve, employ and are governed by Indigenous people, who are an even smaller subset of these recipients. This is an important distinction that requires education across the sector because there is a critical need to consult with Indigenous people and create space to incorporate their voices.

Although our current systems create challenges and barriers for Indigenous-led organizations to access philanthropic support, the philanthropic sector plays a vital role in fostering collaborative and supportive relationships between Indigenous charities and the government to ensure they receive access to sustainable, long-term funding.

SUPPORT FROM THE COMMUNITY

As an Indigenous person, I am passionate about this issue because of the critical values I have learned from my Ojibway culture and relatives. I learned early on that our connection to the land and each other is a sacred responsibility. Through them, I received important lessons about connecting to the land and only taking what is needed, honoring our elders and young children, caring for each other, and giving back to those who need it. There is so much richness and wisdom in traditional customs and practices that can influence transformative approaches. With this in mind, and the opportunities for the philanthropic sector to take action, I am optimistic for the future.

These teachings—along with the care and dedication I've seen from Indigenous staff in communities to ensure that everyone is taken care of regardless of age or circumstance—inspired me to become an Indigenous fundraiser. These charities know their communities better than anyone else, and they are incredibly innovative in developing and delivering services. It is my hope that their stories can be told and become more widely known and recognized.

In 2015, when the Truth and Reconciliation Commission of Canada released its Calls to Action, members of Canada's philanthropic sector prepared the Philanthropic Community's Declaration of Action to promote and encourage positive action on reconciliation within the charitable sector. To date, the statement has been signed by more than 100 charities, nonprofits, foundations and community organizations throughout Canada. Last year, the National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls released its final report. There were 231 calls for justice, which speaks to equity and opportunity.

Following this declaration and the Calls to Action, I hoped that Indigenous-led charities and communities would be overwhelmed with donations. This has not been the case. While awareness about the need to create equity, partnerships and a shared funding model with Indigenous charities has grown, substantial change has yet to happen.

However, I would like to share one example of how an Indigenous-led organization made a significant difference and the importance of philanthropy in making that happen.

In Winnipeg, there are many Indigenous children and youth in the child welfare system. The Ma Mawi Wi Chi Itata Centre—which translates to “we all work together to help one another”—is an organization dedicated to Indigenous solutions that support and rebuilds families. Thanks to a $1 million grant from The Winnipeg Foundation, the organization was able to leverage an additional $1 million from the Province of Manitoba and $500,000 from the federal government that allowed it to scale up a Family Group Conferencing Program. This innovative program assists parents and extended families in successfully reuniting with their children.

While many might believe that governments provide ample funding for Indigenous-led charities and communities, this is not the case. The matching government funding would not have been possible without the initial philanthropic gift, which was the result of years of relationship-building between the community, the Indigenous-led organization and the foundation.

DOING OUR PART AS FUNDRAISERS

An estimated 150,000 Indigenous children have been forced to attend residential schools, a school system created to deny Indigenous children access to their culture while assimilating them to Canadian traditions. As a child, my mother was forcibly removed from her community and placed in residential school. She never fully recovered from her experience, and this made my childhood difficult and challenging. But what I did have was the support of the Indigenous charities that served the community. They played a vital role for me and so many others. I would not be where I am today if it were not for my family and my community. I feel grateful to now be surrounded by people who change lives, take risks and speak up against inequality.

Since then, I have committed to increasing my knowledge about fundraising and developing new networks and connections. I want to encourage more equitable and meaningful engagement with Indigenous-led charities. I have surveyed the successes and challenges of community and diversity and I feel grateful to now be surrounded by people who change lives, take risks and speak up against inequality. The results survey highlighted the need for education and building respectful relationships with Indigenous-led charities and communities within our sector.

The results prove why it is so important to not only have more Indigenous fundraisers, but also to provide them with opportunities like the ones I have received over the years.

We can initiate change. If we continue on this path, it is possible for the sector and government to recognize the critical role Indigenous-led charities play in our community's overall well-being. But it will require us to work together.

This effort will take many years of advocacy and education, but there is something that you can do right now. During this unprecedented time, the Indigenous community is expected to experience the most devastating impacts of COVID-19. While Indigenous-led charities and communities are mobilizing and developing their own strategies, the philanthropic sector can play a key role in ensuring organizations receive the required funding to address urgent needs. Your support in advocating for more funding Indigenous-led charities can help make this possible.

INTERVIEW

Opportunity for Us to do Better

Dahabo Ahmed Omer became the inaugural executive director of the BlackNorth Initiative last fall.

Founded by the Canadian Council of Business Leaders Against Anti-Black Systemic Racism, BlackNorth challenges senior Canadian business leaders to commit their companies to specific actions and targets designed to end anti-Black systemic racism and create opportunities for members of the Black, Indigenous and People of Colour (BIPOC) community.

Prior to her work with BlackNorth, Ahmed Omer was a well-known policy advisor and human rights advocate. She sits on the Federation of Black Canadians board of directors, co-founded the Justice for Abdirahman Coalition, and was director of operations for the Somali Centre for Family Services. In 2019, Ahmed Omer was named one of the 100 most influential people of African descent under age 40, an international award in support of the United Nations International Decade for People of African Descent.

What big questions should leaders in the charitable sector ask themselves now?

I think one of the most important questions that leaders need to ask themselves is what are they individually doing.

When we look at sustainable change, we really need to look at individual behaviour – at how our individual behaviours all feed into the overall behaviour when it comes to the discrimination, anti-Black racism, prejudices, and unconscious bias that we deal with.

It's really important for leaders to first ask themselves, "What am I doing to change the conversation? What am I doing to uplift? What am I doing to empower? What am I doing to change? What is it that I'm individually doing?" Once we all start to ask ourselves the individual questions – the personal one-on-one questions – we'll start to see the big impacts across the board.

It's a hard conversation to have with oneself. It's hard to ask yourself, 'Am I part of the problem? Is there something that I am doing that's perpetuating this?' I think that the answer to that question, generally, will always be 'yes'. If the answer was no across the board, then we would not be having these conversations. I think it's important for leaders to be humble and to be self-conscious. Self-awareness is a gift.

What challenges does COVID-19 recovery present? What about opportunities?

COVID-19 makes it so difficult for us generally to ignore any of the problems. Everything is heightened. Everything is on the surface. It's a wound that's open and fresh. It's in your face, and it makes you very, very uncomfortable.

It's also something that we're globally

Dahabo Ahmed Omer, executive director of BlackNorth Initiative

sharing. It's not something that you're individually (or your own family) going through. It's literally something that's shared across the board.

I think more than anything, the biggest challenges are very much in the health sector, very much in the housing sector, very much in the economic sector. How are we ensuring that people have jobs and can provide for themselves and their families? How do we make sure that people who already had a lack of access to healthcare can now gain some sort of support to assist in this massive pandemic?

It's an uncomfortable place to be, to know that these challenges are in your face and there's no way to ignore them. They were there before. It's not like COVID is racist, because it isn't, but the impact of it is very discriminatory.

All of the challenges that we see now were there for a very long time. COVID has just brought them to the surface so that you can't turn your head away.

I hope that we can turn this into a positive change-maker in the world – something that allows us to connect in a way that we've never been able to before.

I think that the world is showing us the ugly side of the universe, putting up a mirror to all of us and asking, "What are you going to do? Look at what's happening to your people, to humanity generally." I think there's a lot of opportunity for us to do better.

How has the sector had to adapt and change in the context of COVID-19?

The [charitable] sector is the one that's most in tune with communities' needs. They're the ones who are on the ground. They're the ones who are face-to-face with communities and have a line of sight that's a lot clearer than the federal government's. I wholeheartedly believe the federal government should be supporting the charitable sector a lot more than they have been.

There has to be a mechanism that allows the federal government to say to themselves, 'These are the groups that are in direct contact with those we are trying to serve.'

You hear a lot [from] the marginalized communities [telling] you that they don't trust the government, don't go to their community centre, don't go to a foundation. They're looking at this sector as a way out, to sustain themselves: "That's your mandate, what you do. You're there to help me."

It's important for the public sector to start to look at the charitable sector as a partner, as arm-in-arm, shoulder-to-shoulder. What is it that your community needs, and what can we give you? And not do this thing where we need to assess and bureaucratize processes, because [the delays] just impact someone's potential life-or-death situation.

I think we have to be very agile, and the government needs to be able to be right there with the charitable sector. [The sector] can point to where the needs are. We've seen emergency measures put in place [in] 24 hours. The capacity is there. It's not magical – clearly it's possible – and therefore, what is it that can be done more? In order for us to get to the light at the end of the tunnel, the federal government needs to create more partnerships with the charitable sector and look specifically at parts of the sector that are supporting Black communities, Indigenous communities, people of colour and people with disabilities.

What should the relationship between the sector and the federal government look like in the context of COVID-19 recovery?

We talk about this within BlackNorth: having a system that actually speaks to a three-way partnership between the corporate sector, the public sector, and the charitable sector.

Right now it's done very much ad hoc. If there was a mechanism that allows these three entities to actually work hand-in-hand, can you imagine the amount of help that would go towards our communities? It's the whole "working in silos" effect. It doesn't help anyone. All it does is hurt people and delay things.

We've seen it before when a multitude of sectors come together, the impact that they have. COVID has taught us a very costly and valuable lesson: not to be alone.

If we can build a system, or some sort of partnership, that would allow the public sector – whether it be federal, provincial, or municipal – to partner with the corporate and charitable sectors, I think we would do wonders in our communities. Imagine all those assets coming into one place. You can't lose that way.

Name a problem in the sector that everyone knows about but no one wants to tackle. Why?

I wholeheartedly believe that there are some organizations that get a lot more, just because of their brand name, and don't have actual impact, don't create a dent, and don't make changes the way that they need to be making changes.

We don't talk about it, and I think we should talk about it, but it's an uncomfortable conversation. There are some big-name foundations out there that are world-renowned and nationally known. But if you go into communities, they don't know them. They've never heard of them. They've never been there.

What [the community] knows is their own local non-profits or charities that are actually reaching out and helping them.

It's like the bully in the classroom. Nobody wants to confront him. Nobody wants to say anything about the big man or the big group. There's fear that comes with it. There are potential ramifications that come from it.

When you're a smaller charitable organization, you don't necessarily want to go and play with the big dogs because you're not really sure how you're going to come out of that. But it is a reality that there are more grassroots charities that are doing way more work than the big-name [foundations].

PROFILE

Lifeline to the Outside World

VICD Service Dogs, a Division of BC & Alberta Guide Dogs, endeavours to help Veterans and First Responders with operational stress injuries, such as post-traumatic stress (PTSD).

Too often the trauma of service or the workplace leaves Veterans and First Responders with deep scars that make life challenging, if not impossible. At VICD, recipients are matched with PTSD Service Dogs that meet all of the Assistance Dogs International standards and that have specific additional traits that demonstrate suitability for the work. Together, client and dog embark on a unique 52-Week Healthy Community Living Program that helps transition the recipients back into their communities, providing them with renewed purpose, confidence and unconditional support.

Dave has been with his PTSD Service Dog, Storm, for just over a year and the changes that he has experienced have been phenomenal. He would like to share some of his story and the impact that Storm has had in his life and with his family:

"I am a Veteran of the Canadian Armed Forces, and my life has been in shambles for many years due to PTSD and MDD. I found myself locked in the house not wanting to do anything or go anywhere. I applied for a Service Dog several years ago from VICD Service Dogs, and received an amazing, beautiful, energetic Lab named Storm.

He has changed my life in so many ways, that I find it hard to explain how wonderful it has been for me. I now get up every morning to feed and walk him; I play with him and train him. It's truly incredible how one dog can change the life of a Veteran in such a positive way.

Storm has also influenced my spouse, grandson, as well as everyone who visits our property. We live on an acreage, so Storm has lots of room to run and play and that's exactly what we do together. Storm does not permit me to go into those deep dark places because of the bonding we have done. I absolutely 100% love this dog."

Living, breathing connection to community

PTSD Service Dogs from VICD provide a living, breathing lifeline to the outside world. While each bond is unique, the objective remains the same: to empower Veterans and First Responders with the tools to reclaim their place in their communities and rebuild their lives.

Clients enter into the 52-Week Healthy Community Living program with a fully qualified service dog, and together they train as one unified team. This process creates a powerful bond based on trust and mutual service. They attend twice-weekly sessions together, guided by professional instructors and a mental health clinical practitioner. The dogs learn to be emotionally tuned to their person and their unique triggers. They're able to wake clients from nightmares, ground them during a hyper-aroused state, and support them unconditionally through the stresses and trauma of everyday life. This training culminates in the successful graduation of a fully certified PTSD Service Dog Team under Assistance Dogs International and the Guide and Service Dog Acts of British Columbia and Alberta.

Consistent connection is at the heart of the program, which is why once clients graduate from the program, they enter into continued aftercare for the life of their certification. They are also encouraged to consider sharing their experience with new teams.

Graduates express that their PTSD Service Dogs give them confidence to reintegrate into society, and more importantly, to interact in healthy ways with their family, friends, and the communities where they live.

Life-changing dogs for those in need

BC & Alberta Guide Dogs is a registered charity that breeds, raises and professionally trains Guide Dogs for individuals who are blind or visually-impaired, Autism Service Dogs for children ages 3-10 with autism and their families, and PTSD Service Dogs for Veterans and First Responders living with operational stress injuries. These certified Guide and Service Dogs are provided, along with aftercare support, at no cost to families for the working life of the dog. With each dog costing $35,000, this means that the organization relies on donations to provide these essential services.

When you donate to BC & Alberta Guide Dogs, you help transform someone's life for years to come with the gift of safety, independence and support. From one-time gifts to monthly and legacy giving, your donation to BC & Alberta Guide Dogs helps place life-changing dogs for those in need. To learn more about how

Do you trust its leadership to use your donation to create a positive impact? Would you be willing to donate twice, five, or even ten times as much as you are about to give? If the answer is yes, go for it. If you have doubts, give it more thought, gather more information about the organization, read their annual report or reach out to them. Don't be shy! Organizations seek to cultivate transparent and sustainable donor relationships, and would be more than happy to answer your questions.

Trust your gut

Last but not least, take the time to listen to your inner voice. Do you feel satisfied? Happy? Proud? If so, mission accomplished! However, if you feel pressured, forced, or unmotivated, don't ignore those red flags telling you to give it more thought.

Remember that being the perfect donor isn't about acting based on blind trust and without asking (yourself) a few questions. Rather, it may be about re-phrasing some of those questions and considering your donation as the start of a new relationship. And, as in any relationship, trust is built over time.

Caring for Animals Means Caring for Their People

Animals make our lives, families, neighbourhoods and communities safer, healthier and happier. You can help people and animals – doubling the impact of your legacy.

In making decisions about how to ensure that the values that are important to us in life continue to thrive after we are gone,

SYMBOL OF TRUST

The Imagine Canada Trustmark: Why donating to an accredited charity is giving with confidence

The Standards Program

The Imagine Canada Standards Program is designed to help charities and non-profits strengthen their organizational practices, and build donors' trust and confidence. To earn accreditation and use of the Trustmark, organizations undergo a rigorous peer review process to demonstrate excellence in five fundamental areas: board governance; financial accountability and transparency; fundraising; staff management; and volunteer involvement. The Trustmark - a sought-after hallmark of excellence - demonstrates rigorous standards of performance.

Why give to an accredited organization?

Strong leadership and good governance are the qualities to look for when considering donating to a charity. Here are three reasons why donors have peace of mind when giving to an accredited organization.

1. Confidence

According to Ignite Lab Public Opinion survey, nearly 3 in 4 Canadians would have more confidence in a charity accredited by an independent body. Organizations seeking accreditation must provide evidence to demonstrate compliance for each standard, pass a peer review and complete regular compliance report to show ongoing adherence to the standards, which means their policies and practices have been vetted by multiple independent professionals.

2. Transparency

The Trustmark demonstrates the highest possible commitment to transparency. One of the Standards Program's goals is to help charities become more open, notably by encouraging them to implement best practices which promote accessible and regular communications, including releasing financial statements and reporting on the impact of donations.

3. Review & Leadership

Accredited organizations have demonstrated that their board and leaders are committed to excellence. The Trustmark signifies these organizations have met a rigorous set of standards across all levels of the organization and are investing in continuously improving organizational practices.

Choose an accredited organization

The impact of the COVID-19 pandemic will be felt by charities for years to come. Now more than ever, organizations are relying on donors' generosity to continue their mission. When choosing a charity to donate to, consider giving to an organization that has invested in trust.

Over 250 organizations from coast to coast, big and small, and devoted to a diverse range of worthy causes in communities at home and around the globe have earned accreditation by demonstrating organizational excellence. Visit www.imaginecanada.ca to view the list of accredited organizations.

The Standards Program gratefully acknowledges the generous financial contributions from founding and presenting sponsor Canada Life; and generous funding from the Lawson Foundation.

SYMBOLE DE CONFIANCE

Le sceau de confiance d'Imagine Canada : Pourquoi donner à un organisme caritatif agréé, c'est donner en toute confiance

Le Programme de normes

Le Programme de normes d'Imagine Canada vise à aider les organismes de bienfaisance et sans but lucratif à renforcer leurs pratiques organisationnelles et à inspirer confiance aux donateurs. Pour obtenir leur agrément et utiliser le sceau de confiance, les organismes se soumettent à un processus d'examen rigoureux par les pairs pour démontrer leur excellence dans cinq domaines fondamentaux : gouvernance du conseil d'administration; responsabilité financière et transparence; collecte de fonds; gestion du personnel et participation des bénévoles. Le sceau – une marque d'excellence recherchée – atteste la conformité à des normes de rendement rigoureuses.

Pourquoi donner à un organisme agréé?

Un solide leadership et une saine gouvernance sont les qualités à rechercher quand on envisage de faire un don à un organisme caritatif. Voici les trois raisons pour lesquelles ceux qui donnent à un organisme agréé le font en toute tranquillité d'esprit.

1. Confiance

Selon un sondage d'opinion publique réalisé par Ignite Lab Public, près de trois Canadiens sur quatre feraient plus confiance à un organ-isme caritatif agréé par une entité indépendante. Les organismes qui sollicitent l'agrément doivent prouver leur conformité à chacune des normes, réussir un examen par les pairs et présenter périodiquement un rapport de conformité pour démontrer qu'ils continuent de se conformer aux normes. Leurs politiques et leurs pratiques sont donc approuvées par de multiples professionnels indépendants.

2. Transparence

Le sceau de confiance démontre le plus haut niveau d'engagement possible envers la transparence. Le Programme de normes a pour but, entre autres, d'aider les organismes caritatifs dans leur quête de transparence en les encourageant à mettre en œuvre des pratiques exemplaires pour assurer des communications accessibles et régulières, dont la publication de leurs états financiers et de rapports sur les retombées des dons.

Examen et leadership

Les organismes agréés ont démontré l'engagement de leur conseil d'administration et de leurs dirigeants envers l'excellence. Le sceau de confiance atteste que ces organismes respectent un ensemble de normes rigoureuses à tous les niveaux de leur organisation et qu'ils investissent dans l'amélioration continue de leurs pratiques opérationnelles.

Choisir un organisme agréé

La pandémie de COVID-19 aura des répercussions sur les organismes caritatifs pendant de nombreuses années. Aujourd'hui plus que jamais, les organismes comptent sur la générosité des donateurs pour poursuivre leur mission. Au moment de choisir un organisme caritatif auquel faire un don, envisagez un organisme qui a investi dans la confiance.

Près de 250 organismes caritatifs canadiens d'un océan à l'autre, grands et petits, dévoués à un éventail de causes louables au sein des collectivités du Canada et du reste du monde, ont investi dans un leadership responsable et mérité leur agrément en apportant la preuve de leur excellence organisationnelle. Consultez la liste des organismes agréés à www.imaginecanada.ca.

Le Programme de normes est reconnaissant des généreuses contributions financières de Canada Vie, son commanditaire fondateur et principal, et du généreux soutien financier de la Lawson Foundation.

But: Fondée en 1918, l'Association des Amputés de guerre offre des programmes en constante évolution. D'abord vouée aux anciens combattants amputés, elle aide aujourd'hui l'ensemble des personnes amputées, y compris les enfants. En faisant un don testamentaire, vous perpétuez l'œuvre des amputés de guerre et financez nos programmes essentiels destinés aux personnes amputées au Canada, notamment le Programme LES VAINQUEURS qui procure aux enfants amputés une aide diversifiée, entre autres pour leurs membres artificiels, afin qu'ils puissent mener une vie active et autonome. Grâce à votre appui, les programmes de l'association poursuivront leur essor. L'organisme ne reçoit aucune subvention gouvernementale.

"Children are the world's most valuable resource and its best hope for the future."
- John F. Kennedy

For 25 years, Charity of Hope has provided vital assistance to thousands of disadvantaged and special needs children and youth. Since 1996, we have helped children with food, clothing, toys, school supplies, learning technologies, sensory equipment, and summer camp. For troubled and at-risk youth, we have supplied accommodations, positive peer mentorship, personal and professional skills development, and recovery from substance abuse and gang activity.

To learn how we can assist you in maximizing the impact of your legacy gift by selecting from a suite of initiatives benefiting children and youth, please contact our Executive Director, Sam Minniti, at samminniti@charityofhope.com or (905) 741-7471.

It's not just a legacy gift for the future, it's for their future.

Give to a better future

Your bequest today can change someone else's tomorrow

When someone loses their sight, their life can change in many ways. They may have to give up their job or turn over their driver's license. They'll have to learn to adapt to doing everyday tasks without the help of sight. And they'll need to come to terms with the emotional challenges of sight loss as sunshine, colours, and the faces of their loved ones begin to fade from view. You can help.

By making a gift in your will to the CNIB Foundation, you'll ensure people in your community have the support they need to move forward with confidence after losing their sight, and continue to live the lives they choose.

OVER 8 MILLION CANADIANS ARE AT RISK OF GOING BLIND AND THERE ARE NO CURES... YET.

Blindness can affect anyone — infants, children, adults — and it is life limiting. Imagine the struggles of those coping with school or trying to get a job. People living with vision loss just want to see the world like everyone else.

BUT THERE IS HOPE.

Fighting Blindness Canada (FBC) is the only Canadian charity solely dedicated to research for inherited eye diseases, and others like glaucoma and age-related macular degeneration (AMD). To date, we have invested over $40 million dollars to understand, preserve and restore sight.

Thanks to donors like you, Fighting Blindness Canada is able to fund internationally renowned vision researchers who are developing new treatments and cures for blinding eye diseases. Every dollar you give brings us closer to ending blindness.

You can help restore sight through a gift in your will. Please contact Ann Morrison, 1.800.461.3331, ext. 232 or amorrison@fightingblindness.ca.

But: La Fondation INCA qui a fêté ses 100 ans d'existence en 2018 est un organisme sans but lucratif qui vise à changer ce que cela veut dire que d'être aveugle. Nous fournissons des programmes innovateurs et des initiatives de défense des droits qui amènent les personnes touchées par la cécité à réaliser leurs rêves en éliminant les barrières pour favoriser l'inclusion. Notre action est alimentée par un réseau de bénévoles, de donateurs et de partenaires d'un océan à l'autre. Pour en savoir plus ou pour participer, visitez le site inca.ca.

Donnez pour un avenir meilleur

Votre legs aujourd'hui peut changer l'avenir de quelqu'un d'autre demain.

Lorsqu'une personne perd la vue, sa vie peut changer à bien des égards. Elle peut être obligée d'abandonner son emploi ou de rendre son permis de conduire. Elle devra apprendre à s'adapter aux tâches quotidiennes sans l'aide de la vue. Et elle devra faire face aux défis émotionnels de la perte de vision, alors que le soleil, les couleurs et les visages de ses proches commencent à disparaître. Vous pouvez aider.

En faisant un don par testament à la Fondation INCA, vous vous assurez que les personnes de votre collectivité bénéficient du soutien dont elles ont besoin pour aller de l'avant avec confiance après avoir perdu la vue et continuer à vivre la vie qu'elles ont choisie.

Appelez Cindi Meyer, directrice des Dons planifiés, au 1 800 563-2642 (poste 7470) ou envoyez un courriel à cindi.meyer@inca.ca pour en savoir plus sur la façon de créer un don dans votre testament.

communities in Latin America and the Caribbean through five areas of investment: food, health, housing, education, and income-generating projects. FFPC responds to urgent needs while building community and social infrastructure. FFPC utilizes the pre-existing networks of local affiliated organizations to better sustain and grow the communities they serve. Through trusted partners, FFPC has strengthened its emergency preparedness and responds effectively to emergencies and natural disasters when they occur. Over the last 12 years, FFPC and our donors have built 143 homes, 34 schools, as well as shipped and distributed $40,000,000 in food, educational and

Organisme de bienfaisance# 89064 8249 RR0001

Objectif : Mercy Ships Canada a réfléchi à la question de l'héritage et investit dans l'avenir des soins de santé. Depuis plus de 40 ans, Mercy Ships apporte l'espoir et la guérison à celles et ceux qui en ont le plus besoin. Mercy Ships utilise des navires-hôpitaux ultramodernes dirigés par des bénévoles qualifiés pour fournir des soins de santé gratuits dans les pays en développement. Le plus grand navire-hôpital civil au monde est en cours de préparation pour être livré à Mercy Ships. L'ajout du Global Mercy à la flotte de Mercy Ships fait plus que doubler notre capacité à renforcer les systèmes de santé dans les pays en développement et à avoir un impact durable.

Purpose: Oxfam Canada is an affiliate of the international Oxfam Confederation networked in more than 90 countries as part of a global movement for change. Our mission is to build lasting solutions to poverty and injustice with a focus on improving the lives and promoting the rights of women and girls. We work directly with communities, partners and women's rights organizations to challenge the systems that perpetuate inequality and keep people poor. Together we seek to influence those in power to ensure that women trapped in poverty have a say in the critical decisions that affect them, their families and entire communities. That's why we believe that ending global poverty begins with women's rights.

Make ending poverty part of your life story...

close to 20 years as part of Oxfam's International Programs
team*

It's important to me to continue to support the work I believe in, even once I'm gone. I've seen first-hand how Oxfam makes a difference with people and partners in developing countries, through rights-based programs and policy change. I'm making a difference today, and with my legacy gift."

Objectif: La Société canadienne du sang est l'organisme de bienfaisance sans but lucratif qui fournit, à l'échelle nationale (sauf au Québec), les produits vitaux utilisés pour la transfusion et la greffe: sang, plasma, cellules souches, organes et tissus. Les dons en argent aident les patients canadiens en nous permettant d'améliorer nos programmes dans quatre grands domaines, à savoir le sang, les cellules souches, les organes et les tissus, ainsi que la recherche et l'innovation. LET TERRY'S LEGACY INSPIRE YOURS

Forty years ago, cancer forced Terry Fox to stop his Marathon of Hope. Since then, millions of Canadians have helped build a powerful legacy in his honour. Terry never stopped fighting for people with cancer and neither will we.

Ask us how a gift in your estate plan can be life changing.

Purpose: Since its founding in 1918, The War Amps programs have grown from assisting war amputees – whom we still serve – to all amputees, including children. A charitable estate donation in your will honours the legacy of war amputees and funds our essential programs for all amputees across Canada, including CHAMP for child amputees. CHAMP provides comprehensive support, including financial assistance for artificial limbs, to allow children to lead independent and active lives. With your help, our vital programs will carry on long into the future. The War Amps does not receive government grants.

The Circle on Philanthropy and Aboriginal Peoples in Canada (The Circle)

transforms philanthropy and contributes to positive change between Philanthropy and Indigenous communities by creating spaces of learning, innovation, relationship-building, co-creation, and activation.

The Circle works alongside Indigenous-led organizations, Indigenous informed organizations, organizations with Indigenous beneficiaries, our members and philanthropic signatories of The Declaration of Action to encourage settler-philanthropic organizations to learn, acknowledge, and understand more about reconciliation and the decolonization of wealth. The Circle's work aims to transform the settler philanthropic sector in a reorientation toward equity and justice.
